"See here, waiter, don't take that plate away with the apple peeling on. I believe the beef is just as wholesome as the fruit and, in fact, contains more nutriment. The very idea!"

PURIFIED HIS BLOOD

Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills Healed Mr. Wilson's Sores

When the sewers of the body—bowels, kidneys and skin ducts—get clogged up, the blood quickly becomes impure and frequently sores break out over the body. The way to heal them, as Mr. Richard Wilson, who lives near London, Ont., found, is to purify the blood. He writes:

"For some time I had been in a low, depressed condition. My appetite left me and I soon began to suffer from indigestion. Quite a number of small sores and blotches formed all over my skin. I tried medicine for the blood and used many kinds of ointments, but without satisfactory results. What was wanted was a thorough cleansing of the blood, and I looked about in vain for some medicine that would accomplish this.

At last Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills were brought to my notice, and they are one of the most wonderful medicines I have ever known. My blood was purified in a very short time, sores healed up, my indigestion vanished. They always have a place in my home and are looked upon as the family remedy."

Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills cleanse the system thoroughly. Sold by all dealers at 25c a box. 6

BUILDINGS TELL THEIR STORY.

Unwittingly They Reveal Secrets of the Hearts of Those Who Constructed Them.

The observer of buildings may read with ease many a secret of the builder's heart, whether it be pride, ambition, hypocrisy or solid worth. The apartment building that is "built to sell" is easier to read than some structures which are the expression of composite thought. There is a good exterior appearance, halls heavy with "style," with tiled floors, marble walls, and massive chandeliers. But inside the apartments, on every hand, there are evidences of a conscious intention to skimp and neglect even ordinary standards of good carpenter work.

How unwittingly does the builder rear this projection of his inmost character! Would it restrain him to know that others regarded his work as an open confession of the very things he would prefer to hide? It might not change his character, but it could cause him to make such a building as he would like to be thought of as corresponding to in character. If this method of interpreting builders were to be popularized it might raise the standards of the industry. Our contribution to this end would be a proverb, to pass current wherever buildings are contemplated: "A building is a confession in stone."—Collier's.

JUST CASE OF WANDERLUST.

Family Starting to Git Were Properly Sure They Must Land Up Somewhere Eventually.

In the smoking car on a southern railroad, where they had sat up all night, was a family consisting of husband, wife and five children. They were rubbing sleep from their eyes and wrangling with each other when a man entered the car and espied them and advanced to say to the man:

"Howdy, Joe—I'm s'prised to see you."

"Howdy, Tom?"

"Where you-all gwine?"

"Down to Harbor Pint, I reckon."

"But I thought you-all lived up at Cherry Hill?"

"We did."

"What you-all totin' away from there fur?"

"Dunno."

"What you-all gwine to Harbor Pint fur?"

"Dunno. Jest thought we'd go."

"Oh, I see. You-all thought to get?"

"I reckon. Yes, thought we'd git, and we pulled up and started a-gittin', and if we keep on long 'nuff we sure 'nuff must git sumwhar' or other."

"Yes, sure. Been a-gittin' myse'f and always got there some day. It's heaps better than never gittin' 'tall."

Hellish Fashions.

His satanic majesty touched a button and summoned his head imp. "What is all that noise in Factory street?"

"Your imperial majesty, it is the women mobbing the new corset factory. They are all demanding one of those new redhot, electric-charged corsets."

"Sufferin' souls!" gasped his majesty, "and I thought I had invented a new torment."

"The mistake was in forcing that French girl to wear one first. She made 'em all believe they are the very latest style."

"Saints above! and I thought I understood women. Well, well, now that I think of it, the plan works out better than I thought. Take 'em away from all the ladies but a few; see that they are advertised as the very latest fashion and I guess that will make those women who can't get 'em suffer all right, all right."—Puck.

Built to the Memory of a Dog.

Of the memorials to dogs the most imposing of modern date is "Tell's Tower," a structure on the seashore near West Kirby, Cheshire, Eng. It is in honor of the great St. Bernard dog, Tell, "ancestor of most of the rough-coated champions of England, and himself winner of every prize in the kingdom. He was majestic in appearance, noble in character, and of undaunted courage." Built by the late Mr. J. Cumming Macdona, the tower is a sort of summer house, in the base of which is a vault containing Tell's remains, guarded by an effigy of that remarkable animal.—Wide World Magazine.

Apology Due and Forthcoming.

An illiterate young man once got a friend to write a letter for him to his sweetheart. The letter was rather prosaic for a love letter, and he felt that an apology was due to his sweetheart for its lack of tender nothings. It was as follows:

"Please excuse the mildness of this here letter, as the chap wot's 'ritin' it is a married man, and he says he carn't 'bide any soft soapings; it allus gives him the spasmums."

Requisites.

"People who claim to be epicures often eat strange and undercooked food."

"Yes; in order to be a real epicure you've got to have not only good taste but a strong stomach."

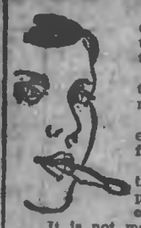
PUTNAM'S PAINLESS CORN EXTRACTOR

A Positive Cure for Deafness



A large proportion of all cases of impaired hearing and deafness is due to disease of the middle ear and Eustachian tubes, caused either by acute inflammation or chronic catarrh.

Nearly all these cases can be cured, or the progress of the disease arrested, by inflation of the ears through the nose and Eustachian tubes with medicated air.

A very safe and efficient means of accomplishing this end can be had by the use of Catarrhozone, a positive cure for catarrh in the most chronic form.

It is sure death to the microbic life which maintains the inflamed condition, and also through its healing properties restores the diseased organs to a healthy, normal condition.

It is not mere theory. The result of actual experience proves that ninety-nine cases in one hundred can be cured, and stay cured, of impaired hearing by the use of Catarrhozone.

Catarrhozone Cures

Catarrhozone is a new scientific remedy for all diseases of the nasal and respiratory passages caused by microbic life, and if you are affected with catarrh, asthma, or bronchitis, it is well deserving of your attention.

It never fails to cure any of these affections, because it is sure to reach the seat of the disease. That is why Catarrhozone is so far in advance of treatment by snuffs, washes, douches, etc., which are absolutely useless, because they cannot reach the root of the trouble.

You simply breathe the medicated air, it does the rest—nothing could be simpler. Complete outfit, sufficient for two months' treatment, price $1.00, at all dealers, or by mail from the Catarrhozone Company, Kingston, Ont.

TREE HOUSES OF THE PAPUANS.

Cool and Clean, But Not Built for Somnambulists.

The famous tree houses of Papua are rapidly disappearing before the march of civilization and settlement in the colony.

The tree house—a neat and well built habitation, placed at an enormous height among the branches of a forest tree and reached only by a swinging ladder—was primarily intended as a refuge from enemies. Now, however, that the government has brought the wild tribes under control the native prefers to live in a house that demands less skill in construction.

There are still many tree houses to be seen, though few or none are being built. In the northeastern district of Papua (where much valuable sugar, rubber and cocoanut land lies ready for taking up) the government officials on their regular tours of inspection often sleep at night in the house of some hospitable native village constable, who draws his ladder up at sundown to a doorstep 30 feet high in the air.

These tree houses are exceedingly cool, clean and picturesque, with the roofs of native made thatch and walls and floors of wattled boughs.

AGE NO MARK OF DISCRETION.

A woman shoplifter who had passed the Psalmist's allotted period, and who had a long record of offenses behind her, was sent to prison again the other day, and in the printed accounts much was made of her years, as if age and misdemeanor were strangers. As a matter of fact, among women, youth and misdemeanor are strangers if, we make the test of the matter the fact of falling into the law's clutches.

More than half the women offenders of New York are classified in the report of the state prison commission as "middle-aged or elderly women." Of the 6,644 women sentenced to the Blackwell's Island workhouse during the last year, 3,462 were more than 30 years old. About one in 15 of the number were legal minors. Disorderly conduct and public intoxication accounted for all but a few hundreds of the entire number.

There is really no surprise in these figures, for the spectacle of gray hairs without honor is not unfamiliar in any of our small parks. It would be superfluous to point the moral—and Horace has done it already in his warnings to Lalage and Chloe.

No Drums in the Middle Ages.

As we come to the Middle Ages, when the nations of modern Europe were struggling into existence, we find that at first, the drum was not used at all. So, although melody had been known and practiced for many centuries, rhythm had been quite forgotten. For what there is left to us of the music of the Middle Ages contains no bars, and we know that it was slowly and monotonously chanted, without the least accent.

In the eleventh century, however, things began to improve, more particularly as the Crusaders brought into Europe all sorts of percussion instruments from the east. Various kinds of drums, tambourines and cymbals were then seen in Europe for the first time since the days of savages, and they have been used, with very little change, ever since.—St. Nicholas.

How One Got His Name.

"An example of a curious Christian name may be found," says a correspondent, "nearer your offices than most of the cases you have printed. The facts are these. The father of a boy baby wished him to be christened Thomas. The mother favored the name of Robert. When they arrived at the church the matter was still undecided. The father informed the curate that the child's name was Thomas.

"'Oh, no!' gasped the mother distressfully.

"The curate regarding the woman as the ruling spirit promptly baptised the infant Ono.

"The grave of Ono Titchener is to be seen in the churchyard of St. Giles', Camberwell."—London News.

Had All the Symptoms.

"Have you ever been bitten by a dog?" he asked.

"Many's de time," replied the unenlightened one.

"Are you not afraid of hydrophobia?"

"Nix on de hydro."

"'Tis a curious disease. When a person contracts hydrophobia, the very thought of water makes him sick."

"Is dat on de level? Youse ain't stringin' me?"

"It is a scientific fact."

"Den I bet I've had it all me life, an' never knowed wot was de matter wid me!"

One Way He Could Help.

An eastern college graduate applied for work in a Michigan lumber camp. He was told to get busy on one end of a cross-saw, the other end being in charge of an old and experienced lumberman. At first all went well, but at the end of the second day the young man's strength began to wane. Suddenly the old man stopped the saw and spat.

"Sonny," he said, not unkindly, "I don't mind yer ridin' on this saw, but if it's jest the same to you I wish you'd keep yer feet off the ground."—Everybody's

DUELS AMONG SUDANESE ARABS.

Where Pastoral Life Doesn't Always Lead to Peace and Quiet.

The country to the southeast of Tekar, in Africa, is the home of the Hasas; the Hadendoas occupy the khors to the south and the plateau to the southwest. Both of these are black Arabs, speaking different languages.

The Hasas live almost entirely on sour milk, while the Hadendoas are agricultural as well as pastoral. Their dokhn and durra, milletlike grains, were ripening in February and being protected from countless swarms of small birds by men who stood on elevated platforms, from which they cracked loudly large whips with palm leaf lashes 20 feet long.

The dress of these Arabs is a cotton sheet held in by a belt in which they carry crooked knives. For other weapons they use sticks, spears and swords. Firearms are prohibited. Judging by the many scars borne by the men the pastoral life is by no means so peaceful as the poets would lead us to think. Many of the scars come from duels, in which the men cut each other alternately in the back till one cries "Enough!"

Hash.

Some people find fault when eating hash because they don't know what is in it. Such souls are simply trying to dodge happiness. Would anybody ever start upon a journey if they knew the cars were going to leave the track, or that the bridge was sure to collapse? No, indeed. Would lovers of hash ever order that most toothsome viand were it not for the delightful uncertainty attached to it—the compelling mystery in which it is wrapped?

Why be wise when perfect happiness lies in ignorance? Hash has stood the test of time, and, whatever it is made of, history has yet to place a calamity at its door. Wine has caused the head to rise above the church steeples; pie has ruined the digestive apparatus and hot biscuits have brought the price of nightmares down to a surprisingly low figure; but hash, plain, regular, inoffensive hash, has gone on down the ages and left nothing in its wake but a fond memory and a sweet taste in the mouth. Why worry?

Phenomena Awed Europe.

Europe and Asia were covered by fog during the summer of 1783. Says Gilbert White (letter 199): "The summer of the year 1783 was an amazing and a portentous one . . . for, besides the alarming meteors and tremendous thunderstorms . . . the peculiar haze, or smoky fog, that prevailed for many weeks in this island (England) and in every part of Europe, and even beyond its limits, was a most extraordinary appearance. The heat was intense. Calabria and part of the Isle of Sicily were torn and convulsed with earthquakes." Cowper also refers to this phenomenon, in speaking of "nature, with a dim and sickly eye."

J. THAT 6... HT RETURNS

Girls in Profusion Ready to Accept Inducement Offered by Absent Minded Man.

One male stenographer is not very happy just now, says a writer in the New York Times. His wife asked him to put in an advertisement for a maid. He consented, but absently, and only remembered his errand at the moment before setting our for his home.

He wrote and mailed the ad., making only one slight mistake. He offered $15 per week, instead of per month!

The next morning, at six of the clock, the front door bell rang.

"See who that is," said the wife, dreamily. He saw! Two Swedish maidens, one rosy German girl, a bonnie Scottish lass, a demure English woman, past her first youth; a number of females, age, appearance, manners, accent, all offering a rich variety, clamored for the privilege of serving in his $45 flat!

"You'd better get up—I didn't know times were as hard as this, poor things," he remarked to his wife.

She rose, and interviewed the various nationalities in a kimono. Her husband dressed hastily, with visions of an extra good breakfast floating in the air before him.

"Which did you take?" he asked, eagerly, as his wife returned.

These pages must not record the language before which a stricken man fled, dropping in at a restaurant for rolls and coffee. He entered his office and worded another ad., a sadder man, at any rate!

MADE THE EULOGY A FARCE.

Bishop Potter's Illustration of the Inadvisability of Relying Too Much on Notes.

The late Rev. Henry Codman Potter greatly objected to the use of notes. At one time he was addressing a number of young theologians on the importance of not being too closely confined to a manuscript. By way of illustration he told the following anecdote about a clergyman who was called upon to officiate at a funeral.

"When the minister arrived at the town where the deceased had lived he had just time to make a few inquiries about his traits and achievements, the results of which he noted on a memorandum. His eulogy at the service, as reported, was about as follows:

"'Our dear brother, whom we mourn to-day, was a man of rare character and ability. He had a mental capacity of a'—referring to his notes—'Daniel Webster, the tact of a'—again consulting his memoranda—'Henry Clay, the pertinacity of a'—another reference—'Ulysses S. Grant. We can only mourn him with profound and sorrowful regret now that he has gone to meet his'—another reference to his notes—'God.'"—Judge.

Mystical Number "Seven."

The number "seven" has a peculiar emphasis and frequency throughout the scriptures, and for that reason it is sometimes called "the perfect number."

We are told that the animals entered the ark by sevens. The years of plenty have generally come by sevens. The Mosaic law appointed not only the seventh day, but the seventh month, every seventh year a Sabbathic year, and every seven times the seventh year a jubilee. The feasts of the tabernacles continued seven days. The animals in many religious sacrifices were seven in number, and the golden lamp stand has seven branches.

Seven priests and seven trumpets went around Jericho seven days and seven times on the seventh day.

A similar regard for the number "seven" prevailed in Persia, India, and among the Greeks and Romans of early times. In fact its symbolic use probably antedates all authentic records, according to reliable authorities.

Despised Wood Is Valuable.

Time brings revenges, even in the timber trade, and a humble conifer long treated with contempt seems, literally, to be on the point of getting a rise in the world. "Hitherto the black spruce," says the Dundee Advertiser, "has been despised by our few British foresters as of meager commercial value, the yellowish timber being soft and easily indented, though very light and long of grain. It has lately been discovered that, by virtue of the last named two qualities, this tree furnishes by far the best wood for aeroplanes. As yet the black spruce has rarely been planted by our sylviculturists save for ornament or shelter."

Playing on the Street.

In France children are not allowed to play in the streets, and women do not promenade on the highways, declares an automobilist who is surprised that the law should allow such things in this country, with the consequence of constant liability to accident. Children in this country are not taught to respect the rights of other people, and rush in front of automobiles and street cars in a way that is not known in any other country.

Brutal Indifference.

"It seems since his marriage John Thornley has developed into a perfect brute."

"You surprise me! What has he done?"

"Why, the other night while his wife was regaling him with all the particulars of that choice Verifast scandal she noticed that he seemed very quiet. And what do you think! He was sound asleep!"

TRIBUTE TO "MOTHER VOLGA"

There is an air so popular in Russia that it is even more familiar than their national anthem to the people of that great mysterious empire, says a writer in the Travel Magazine. I have heard it in all part of the czar's dominions, from the Baltic sea to Bering strait and from Archangel to the Caspian; in the glittering palaces of Petersburg and in foul prison dens of Siberia.

It is a simple melody in the minor key, suggestive, like most Slav music, of sorrow and unrest, and it is called "Matushka," or "Mother Volga," as for some cryptic reason every Russian, be he noble or nihilist, is taught from childhood to regard this great river in the light of a maternal relative. Yet the river is full of sad associations, for convicts formerly traveled a portion of the journey to Siberia along its broad, sluggish stream.

I can never forget the haunting sweetness of "Matushka Volga" as I heard it sung on a prison barge one quiet summer evening by a party of fettered politicals banished to the great lone land of exile. For "Mother Volga" was their last link with home and the loved ones they might never meet again.

Fortunately the condemned are now sent into Asia by the Trans-Siberian railroad and the unhappy exile is spared at least one bitter parting—that from his well beloved "Mother Volga."

In and Out of Focus.

"I beg a thousand pardons," said the man with the strange eyes, "for not speaking to you the moment I entered the room. I will tell you why. When I enter a room it is almost impossible for me to recognize anybody for a few minutes. My eyes won't focus. When I was a child I had a serious illness. When I finally recovered, my eyes were in this condition, and have remained so ever since."

But just the same she noticed that when the waiter passed with the punch his eyes focused on it correctly every time.

NOT MUCH TROUBLE TO WRITE

Some Proper Names That at Least Have the Distinguishing Merit of Novelty.

In the Zuyder Zee there is a bay called Y, and Amsterdam has a river Y, while, strange to say, in quite another part of the earth, in China, the same brief name is given to a town.

Elsewhere in the flowery kingdom, in the province of Honan, there is a city called U, and in France there is a river and in Sweden a town rejoicing in the name of A.

Proper names of this brief nature are not, however, monopolized by places; instances are on record where individuals have been similarly named. Some years ago there was a shop kept on the Rue de Louvan, Brussels, by Theresa O, and there is a Mme. O in Paris, who is well-known as the proprietor of a popular cafe.

An amusing incident is recounted in connection with the impressment into the military service of the son of one of the members of the O family. The young man could not write, and so signed his name on the military papers with a cross, it not occurring to him or to any of the officials how easily he could have written his name.

Those Frail Boats.

"In an account of a wreck on the Long Island coast that I read the other day," observed the retired yachtsman, "I was pained to notice in one paper that the crew left the schooner in a 'frail boat,' the said craft being properly described in the Press as the ship's long boat. I know that is the conventional phrase to describe a vessel's small boat, but as I read it I wondered if the 'frail boat' writer ever had seen one of those ponderous fabrics of oak called the ship's long boat? Or if he ever had tried to haul a 14-foot yawl off a beach after it had been left high and dry by the tide? Such a job on a hot July day probably would cure him forever describing even such a boat as frail."

Just an Ordinary Kansas Man.

A Kansas woman, while in New York last summer with her husband, visited Lake Chautauqua. She wanted a veil, and held out her hand to her husband for money. He just laid his pocketbook in her hand and walked unconcernedly around the store.

"My," ejaculated the clerk, "and he never asked you how much you wanted nor what you were going to do with it. You ought to hear the arguments that they get into right here some times when a woman asks a man for money. My, but you ought to be thankful to have a husband like that."

"Oh, I don't know," she returned, nonchalantly, "he is just a Kansas man. That's the style out there."—Kansas City Journal.

Fad for Clean Money.

There is a fad at present for disdaining dirty money and seeing to it that one's purse contains only bills and coins that are immaculate. Fresh, clean bills can be procured from the bank, where soiled ones will be taken in exchange, but clean silver is another matter, and those who follow fads must either accomplish it themselves or by instructing their maids to do it for them. The silver is washed in a strong solution of soap suds and ammonia, scrubbed with a brush and polished with a chamois, the result being glistening coins in cleanly enough condition to suit the most fastidious.

"Has your son had any success as a lawyer?"

"Well, no, to tell the truth, he hasn't. He has been practicing now for nearly eleven years and he has never been elected to the legislature or been appointed receiver for anything or even become president of any railroad company. It begins to look as if he may have to eke out a living just practicing law."

Moving on Short Notice.

I was lying on the floor of an old country loghouse one summer day, near a big, open fireplace, when I heard a peculiar, frightened squeak. I got up to see what looked like a huge mouse moving at a very rapid walk across the room. When I got closer look I saw that it was a mother mouse moving her whole family. At least, I hope there was none left behind, for very soon a small snake, but large enough to put into a panic the mother of four less than half-grown children, came through the empty fireplace, and after the little fugitive. The mother mouse had two in her mouth, and fastened to either side of her, apparently holding on with their mouths and for "dear life" were the other two. I killed the snake, and watched the moving family disappear through a hole in the corner.—St. Nicholas.

This Mixed-Up World.

If things would not run into each other so, it would be a thousand times easier, and a million times pleasanter to get on in the world. Let the sheepiness be set on one side and the goatiness on the other, and immediately you know where you are. It is not necessary to ask that there be any increase of the one, or any diminution of the other, but only that each shall pre-empt its own territory, and stay there. Milk is good, and water is good, but don't set the milk-pail under the pump. Pleasure softens pain, but pain embitters pleasure; and who would not rather have his happiness concentrate into one memorable day, that shall gleam and glow through a lifetime, than have it spread out over a dozen comfortable commonplace, humdrum forenoons and afternoons, each one as like the other as two peas in a pod?—Gail Hamilton.

IN DEFENSE OF THE PILLORY

English Writer Shows Some Good Points About This Old-Time Form of Punishment.

Perhaps one of the few really democratic institutions ever created was the pillory. I do not say that it was a humane institution, though it was certainly more humane than our system of silent imprisonment. But being humane has nothing to do with being democratic. You may have humane and inhumane democracies, just as you may have humane and inhumane despots.

The point is that the pillory was a real appeal to the people. If it was cruel, it was because the people were cruel, or perhaps justly indignant. The people threw dead cats (the less humanitarian, I believe threw live cats), but they could throw bouquets and crowns of laurel if they liked. Sometimes they did. The argument about the old public punishments cuts both ways. The publicity was an additional risk for the government as well as an additional risk for the prisoner, and this is specially true of the executions for treason. It was no small thing that half a million men might possibly treat as a martyr a man whom the king was treating as a murderer; that the prince had to concede to every obscure ruffian exactly what that ruffian probably wanted most—fame.—G. K. Chesterton, in London News.

REALLY NO PUZZLE AT ALL.

Erudite Editor Arises to Explain Why Women Descend From Street Cars the Wrong Way.

"It makes us tired," wrote the editor of the Hickory Ridge Missourian, "when we see some city newspaper wondering why it is that a woman always gets off a street car the wrong way. There ain't no mystery about it at all. Our wife explained it to us years ago, and she never rode on a street car but once in her life, when she was visiting relations in Kansas City. A woman gets off a street car backward because she naturally grabs her skirts with her left hand. That's constitutional with a woman. Then she has to grab something with her right hand to hold on to, and that's the railing at the rear end of the car, so when she steps off she has to face the wrong way. You can't break women of that habit unless you make them get off on the left side of the street car, and if you did that it's just as likely as not they'd be contrary enough to grab their skirts with their right hands. But there ain't nothing strange about the way they get off now. Blamed if we don't think sometimes that some of the stupidest men in the world is working on the big city papers."—Chicago Tribune.

Wives and Wives.

"Mahomedans are not so much more reckless in their number of wives," remarked the Arabian doctor who makes his home in New York, "than New Yorkers. The principal difference is that, instead of living in New Jersey rather than pay them alimony in New York, we keep them altogether in one house at home. Expensive on account of Easter hats? Not at all. The Arabian women wear veils, which are not expensive. But in the matter of the number of wives, many Mahomedans are very exclusive in that particular. For example, while my uncle has 25 wives, my father has never had but one, my mother. My parents are both now nearly 90 years old, but they are as much in love as they were when they were first married, and I am their only son. My uncle, who has 25 wives, has no children."

Bean Milk.

"Pigeon milk is a myth," said a milkman, "but there actually is a bean milk. It is drunk, put in tea and coffee, and even frozen for ice cream. The Japs are its inventors. This milk is made of the Soja bean. The bean is first soaked, then boiled in water. After the liquid turns white sugar and phosphate of potash are added, and the boiling is kept up till a substance of the thickness of molasses is obtained. Nobody could tell this bean milk from condensed milk, and when water is added it can't be told from the fresh. The Japanese poor use nothing else."

NOT A CORPOREAL DELIGHT.

Real Nature of the Kiss, as Viewed by a Writer Who Has Clearly Studied the Subject.

It is the fashion of the more bilious moralists to put kissing among the gross pleasures, with eating, yodling, snoring and the use of tobacco; but, as a matter of fact, it is not a corporeal delight at all, says a writer in the Baltimore Sun. Its sole physical accompaniment, indeed, is a sensation of suffocation, and this, as all will admit, is scarcely agreeable. No; the insidious charm of the pastime must be sought in its psychic effects—in its marvelous and delightful interference with the normal processes of ratiocination. A man kissed is a man transfigured and transmogrified. Let him be the worst of misanthropes before the sweet impingement of nose upon nose, and he may yet emerge from the turmoil a philanthropist. One kiss, properly stage-managed, is enough to transform a pirate into a poet, a politician into a philosopher, or vice versa. One small kiss, indeed, is sufficient to turn a proud, heaven-kissing bachelor into a servile married man—the most stupendous, antipodal and lamentable transformation possible, at this writing, in a mere human being.

NEWEST USE FOR NAIL FILE.

A Philadelphia doctor has discovered a brand new use for a nail file which is likely to become much more prominent than the old use. A short time ago this doctor was a guest at a dinner in one of Philadelphia's most exclusive houses. When the last course had been served and the cigars were being passed the doctor reached down into his trousers and extracted a penknife. Slowly he opened a blade. Everybody gasped. Could it be that Dr. —— would so far forget himself as to manicure his nails at the table? All watched with bated breath. Slowly the doctor reached out and secured a match which was near his place. Then he deliberately struck his match on the rough part of the nail file and lit his cigar. The suspense was over and the doctor had not committed the frightful breach of etiquette which his associates had feared. Now the custom is spreading fast, for it is less effort than it is to stand on one leg to strike the match on one's shoe, and decidedly more elegant than the time-honored method of striking it on one's trousers.

Probably True.

"Say," said the farmer, who was unloading potatoes at the grocery, "do you believe that story about little George Washington and the hatchet and the cherry tree?"

"Don't ask me," laughed the grocer.

"Well, I think it is probably true. I've got a boy ten years old at home, and after he had teased me for a year or so I bought him a boy's ax."

"And did he cut down your favorite cherry tree?"

"He did a heap better than that. He cut down most of the apple orchard orchard."

"And did he tell a lie about it?"

"Nope. Owned up like a little man."

"And, like Washington, you praised him?"

"Unlike Washington, I didn't do any such blamed thing. I gave him a hiding on the spot, and have licked him once a day since and am going to keep it up until he is twenty-five years old."

The DAY of the DUEL

A BARBED SHAFT

(A TRUE STORY)

HE WAVED THEM BACK, POINTING TOWARD TEVIS.

THE thumping and banging of a primitive band at the end of the street was the signal that Downieville, pioneer settlement of the new California, meant forthwith to celebrate its Fourth of July in approved and traditional style. Groups of miners, shopkeepers politicians and rough garbed generality that had been loitering in expectation of the blaring announcement began to move in about the rostrum. The anvils had pretermitted their thunderings and had been charged for a simultaneous salute to usher in the ceremony.

On the temporary stand, draped in bunting as fresh and bright as its own virgin timbers, the usual ring of chairs for the celebrities guarded the speaker's table. An inevitable water pitcher, huge and white, stood forth as the emblem of the occasion. While the crowd was gathering long coated and tall hatted men were climbing to the platform, where they took their seats with elaborate ease, smiling and chatting among themselves. The band, under the spur of commendable patriotism, slid and bumped from one travesty of a national air to another, pausing not at all.

One of the favored circle upon the platform, a thin, deliberate individual with sweeping mustaches, whose expression of chronic solemnity was heightened by a long scar, turned to his neighbor with the remark that every other man in the assemblage had made or was making:—

"So we're goin' to have a woman orator, eh?"

The man addressed was Charles E. Lippincott, State Senator from Yuba county. He was short, heavy and powerful, with sharp black eyes and light hair. He gave his answer deliberately, while he swept the throng in a steady glance:—"Even so. The boys are strong for any game that advertises the presence of a woman in Downieville—a real woman, I mean."

"She's certainly snatched them with that talk about the crystal water on the mossy rocks," said the other.

"Naturally," nodded Lippincott. "Miss Sarah Pellet, you may be aware, is one of the best temperance speakers in the country, and more than that she's handsome, and more than that she's straight. She had a flourishing division of the Sons of Temperance in working order before she'd been here two days. In fact, pretty near the whole population is either a Son or howling for adoption."

"For enthusiasm they're hard to beat. There was a husky Dutchman in from Marysville the other day who started a little racket of his own to prove the essential superiority of whiskey over all other beverages. The Sons heard his argument and then held his head in a tub by way of rebuttal. His motion was lost, he voting to make it unanimous. Oh, yes, Downieville is temperate all right."

Heard About Tevis.

"Corain' over I heard some talk about Robert Tevis wantin' to do the oratin' himself. Folks was sayin' he was crazy when they shoved him out for a woman." The scarred man moved closer and dropped his voice.

"He had some such notion, but the Sons wouldn't hear of it. Being somewhat young and somewhat pushing, he had an idea it would help him in his campaign for Congress on the know nothing ticket."

"Did they convince him of his error like they did the Dutchman?"

"Not quite. But they were bound to have Miss Pellet and Miss Pellet they would have, sprouting Congressmen to the contrary notwithstanding. They calmed Tevis by giving him the Declaration of Independence to read. Here he comes now."

A tall, spare young man, with thin shoulders and tightly buttoned coat, was making his way up the steps. He had removed his hat, showing his high pale forehead, from which the black hair swept back romantically. He had a roll of paper in one hand, and with courteous bows to right and left he advanced with dignity to his seat.

The scarred man inspected the new arrival gravely. "Kind of fond of himself, ain't he?"

"I imagine he is rather inclined to take everything seriously," answered Lippincott with a slow smile. "But perhaps that's the result of his political aspirations."

The dialogue was cut short at this point by a commotion in the throng, followed by cheering. All the celebrities stood up, hats in hand, turning toward the steps where a young woman appeared, escorted by two effusive citizens wearing monstrous badges. She nodded brightly in response to the greeting, and made her way to the chair in front, flanked by the speaker's stand and the dominating water pitcher.

Miss Sarah Pellet was then counted among the most successful temperance lecturers of the country. A close friend of Lucy Stone Blackwell, she had thrown herself in the cause with the devotion and fervor of youth and passionate conviction. Not the least of her triumphs had been the subjection of Downieville and its instant response to her appeals. If the result was due to her own charming personality, the chivalry of the new West and the audacious novelty of her crusade rather than to the logic of her propaganda it was none the less a tribute and, for the moment, genuine. She was almost the first "real" woman to visit the mining town, and men who had not seen such a phenomenon for years had come long, weary miles for a glimpse of her handsome face and trim figure.

A final wrench from the band was followed by the roar of the anvils, which exploded with gratifying precision and violence. A leading citizen then stepped to the edge of the platform, stilled the applauding multitude, and introduced, with a few eloquent periods, the "Honorable Robert Tevis, who will read to you that illustrious document which made possible this glorious anniversary which we so fittingly celebrate."

The "Honorable Robert Tevis" advanced, bowing in acknowledgment of a not too hearty reception. His exceeding irritation over the obdurate refusal of the committee to allow him leading place on the programme had lowered him in public estimation. Cold of nature, lacking in magnetism, rather proud and very serious, he was not a figure at any time to win and hold such an audience. The crowd listened respectfully, however, while he read the stirring phrases of the Declaration in full, round tones.

As he lowered his paper at the conclusion he had his reward of perfunctory applause, but to the surprise of all present he did not retire. Standing in his place he began to speak. The gathering fell silent for a moment to listen. He had not covered more than half a dozen sentences when his hearers understood that he had started full swing into a formal oration.

The discovery left some of the men amused, but more of them angry. Hoots and catcalls began to come from the outskirts of the crowd. As Tevis boomed on it became evident that, willy nilly, he intended they should hear what he had to say. His persistence aroused further resistance and the murmurings rose.

"It is, therefore, incumbent upon us to remember that each crimson stripe on that starry flag is as a monument to"—— Tevis had progressed so far when a brazen crash drowned his words. Some of the more boisterous had corralled the band and with more racket than melody limped into the strains of "Yankee Doodle."

The speaker, pale and determined, held on his rhetorical way, though not even those nearest him could hear a word. He might have dominated the band and the jeers, but members of the Sons of Temperance found a silencer that he could not outface. The anvils began their noise once more and he gave way before their consecutive protests. With a furious gesture he wheeled and stalked to the steps. A moment later he was hurrying away up the street pursued with ironic laughter.

When order had been restored the same leading citizen, urbane and nobly brief, stepped forward again and introduced the speaker of the day, Miss Sarah Pellet. She received the tribute of absolute quiet and prolonged applause and the rest of the programme was carried out smoothly as planned.

Charles E. Lippincott sat in the office of the Sierra Citizen that evening and prepared an account of the humiliation of Tevis with facile and satiric pen. Before entering political life in California he had been editor of a democratic paper in Illinois and was regarded by his associates as one of their ablest writers. For the purposes of the approaching campaign the democrats had rented two columns in the Citizen. Lippincott had been placed in charge of this section, and from day to day his pithy, humorous comments followed events of public interest.

Knowing the facts that had led up to the speech-making of Tevis and keenly alive to the ludicrous spectacle presented by that ambitious young man in his pique against a woman, Lippincott spared nothing in giving his readers an account of the incident.

"It is, of course, a matter for profound regret that the golden words of our promising if youthful know nothing should have been thus lost to fame. Those who were privileged to hear his effort as he drilled among the cabbages and early rising mules while yet the sun, obscured its diffident rays have informed us they could not restrain their tears—we mean the people. How sad to ponder upon what sweet anguish we have missed!" This was the vein he chose, one most galling to wounded pride and self-sufficiency. He found here an opportunity to exercise his wit at the expense of a political opponent, and the result sent Downieville into spasms next morning.

Calvin B. MacDonald, editor of the Citizen, was at his desk about ten o'clock when hurried footsteps sounded on the stair. He looked up at the entrance of a wild eyed, dishevelled figure. It was Robert Tevis, whose romantic brow and thin face bore the red stamp of uncontrolled fury. He hurled himself upon MacDonald, shaking the morning's issue of the Citizen before him.

"Do you see that? Do you see it?" he shouted. "What do you intend to do about it, sir? I demand—I demand"——

"Hold on," said MacDonald. "You don't understand"——

"I understand perfectly," shrieked Tevis. "I'll have satisfaction from you. I"——

Seeking Lippincott.

"What I wanted to say," resumed MacDonald, "was that you're quite mistaken. I have absolutely no jurisdiction over the democratic columns of the paper, if you mean the joking comments that appeared in them this morning."

"Joking comments!" Tevis choked with rage. "Is that what you call them? I tell you, sir, I am utterly disgraced and nullified. I am made a puppet and an idle thing. If you were not responsible for this most stinging insult, who was?"

"Why, I guess there's no secret about that," said MacDonald. "Charlie Lippincott, the Senator from Yuba, is running the section for his party. But don't take on that way, my boy; you'll hurt yourself. Sit down and we'll talk it over quietly."

"I won't sit down. I won't talk it over!" yelled Tevis. "Do you think I can rest under this for a moment? Where is Lippincott?" He made as if to rush into the next room, but MacDonald caught him by the flap of his coat and forced him into a chair. There he held the trembling, raging visitor while he talked hard sense to him.

"It's no use, Tevis," he wound up. "Everybody will be against you and goodby to your chances of Congress if you kick up a rumpus with Lippincott. The boys are all for Miss Pellet, and they'd look upon any break from you as a slam at her. It's just one of those occasions when a man's got to take his medicine and say nothing, that's all."

But Tevis refused vehemently to be satisfied. Nothing would suit him short of instant personal revenge upon the man who had added the most acrid drop of bitterness to his defeat of the preceding afternoon.

"I want to fight!" he cried tensely. "I'll fight him on the street or over a bar, or anywhere I see him. And what I want of you now, MacDonald, is the publication of a card under my name which will make a fight inevitable unless the coward needs a whiplash in addition."

The editor protested that the affair was none of his and that he could accept no such card for publication.

"Then I'll fight you, too," shouted the belligerent Tevis, bouncing up from his chair. "Damn it all, man, don't you go interfering with this. You're running a paper and you can't refuse to sell space for announcements at your own whim. I shall consider it as a deliberate reflection upon me if you do, and I shall act accordingly."

"Oh, well, if you're out to fight the whole county I suppose you'll have to have it," said MacDonald, yielding to the firebrand. "I guess you'll have your hands full, beginning with Lippincott."

The next issue of the Sierra Citizen contained a small notice in one corner of the regular news section, as follows:—

"The author of the article entitled 'Sad Tale of a Know Nothing Youth,' in yesterday's Citizen, is hereby denounced as a liar and a slanderer.

(Signed) "ROBERT TEVIS."

Lippincott was sitting with his chance acquaintance of the scar, Colonel James, in the El Dorado saloon, when the issue containing this card was brought to his attention. He read it slowly and reached for his morning drink with characteristic deliberation. James noted the gesture approvingly.

"Seems like that there young rooster is bound to get himself clipped," he remarked.

"Will you act for me?" asked Lippincott carelessly.

"With pleasure on my brow," returned the other, displaying a trace of animation upon his solemn and repelling countenance. "Do you challenge?"

"Of course," said Lippincott. "I should be very sorry to have to kill him. I've never even met the man, but if he's set I shall accommodate him."

The Formal Defiance.

Colonel James proceeded with due gravity to deliver the formal defiance intrusted to him, and was promptly referred by Tevis to a friend, Lloyd Smith, whom he designated as his second. A conference took place between the two representatives and, following the instruction of his principal, Smith announced that the duel would take place with double barrelled shotguns, loaded with ball, at forty yards.

The saturnine Colonel James had no objections to offer to such desperate terms, having full authority from Lippincott to accede to all conditions. It was further agreed that the fight should take place on the morrow at a spot in the Sierra county hills to be determined upon as occasion required.

Word of the impending affair could not be kept from public knowledge. The publication of the insulting card, a recognized means of forcing a duel, drew all eyes upon the man who had inserted it and the man against whom it was directed. Before night even the terms were known and had been widely discussed. Miss Pellet was greatly distressed when the news was communicated to her. She felt that, all innocently, she had been the direct cause of the disagreement, and at her urgent request some of the loyal Sons of Temperance, or, rather, some of the men who admired and respected her most, undertook to bring all possible influence to bear toward a reconciliation.

It was discovered by some of these volunteer peacemakers that both Lippincott and Tevis were members of the Odd Fellows. A meeting of the local lodge was convened that evening and the power of the organization was invoked to prevent bloodshed. Emissaries were despatched to both belligerents with fraternal appeals. The one who saw Tevis returned with word that the young man was deaf to reason, standing firm for his absolute right to manage what concerned him closely without interference. The messenger to Lippincott brought back the answer that the editor considered all the responsibility as resting with Tevis. If Tevis would withdraw the language used in his card by another and similar publication he would be willing to accept an apology.

The lodge was forced to abandon the attempt in face of such a situation. The members agreed, however, to aid the authorities in all possible ways looking toward the maintenance of law. The futile meeting broke up at daybreak with nothing accomplished.

Watch was kept upon both Tevis and Lippincott throughout the morning, but shortly after noon both of the principals and their seconds succeeded in eluding the vigilance of the Odd Fellows. The sheriff was notified and had little difficulty in collecting a large posse. The pursuers spread out into the wooded hills in a last desperate effort to apprehend the duelists.

Meanwhile the four in the duelling party had assembled on a plateau among the hills about six miles from town, where, shielded by the ranks of sombre firs, they thought to be free from interruption. The space had been measured and the ground prepared when James, who carried a field glass, ran up with word that he had sighted a group of armed men on an adjacent eminence. The formalities were postponed once more and the four, fugitives from the agents of justice and order, sought another spot where the provisions of the code duello might be followed. James picked out a hill some distance off, which lay in a different county, and indicated that as the place of meeting. Then the principals, each accompanied by his second, separated and plunged into the forest.

It was afterward related by both James and Smith that the two antagonists displayed marvellous proficiency in the use of their weapons during the journey to the rendezvous. James set up an empty flask against a tree at the required distance and Lippincott shattered it at one shot. Smith, with the same idea of profiting by the postponement, cut a target on a fir trunk and Tevis, flinging gun to shoulder carelessly, sent the contents of both barrels crashing into it. The younger man had chosen the weapon with which he was most familiar, but in doing so he had obtained no advantage over his adversary. Lippincott had spent the preceding winter in deer and bear hunting among the hills and was known as a remarkably good woodsman.

When the party reassembled at the appointed spot the sun was low in the west. There was nothing further to fear from the well meaning pursuers and the business of the moment began without delay. The best strip of ground available, in a clearing, sloped slightly and it was necessary to toss for position.

James won and chose the lower end of the field for Lippincott. Smith pointed out to Tevis that this arrangement would make a decided difference in the shooting condition and warned him that it would be his tendency to shoot high. Tevis said that he understood perfectly.

Bent Upon Vengeance.

The wild rage that had shaken Tevis so furiously the day before had subsided, leaving him cold and purposeful. Not for a second did he relax his resolve to wipe out the slur cast upon him by taking the life of the man who had thrust the hashed shaft of ridicule. His severity, his long, serious face and high forehead from which the black hair swept back, had lost all suggestion of pose or affectation. While it was evident from his abstracted manner and his pallor that he was fully sensible of his danger, there was no indication that his courage or resolution faltered for a moment.

Lippincott might have been on a junketing trip for all the concern he appeared to entertain. His quick black eyes, the only part of the man that seemed capable of rapid movement, had lost none of their watchfulness. He stood at his mark, heavy, solid, perfectly poised and controlled, and measured the ground as casually as if he were preparing for target practice.

The only one present who exhibited the slightest agitation was Smith. It was his first affair of honor and he lacked the official solemnity strictly maintained by Colonel James. After his principal had been placed he hurried up to him.

"Stand up to it; stand up to it, Tevis," he said. "Are you all right?"

"I think so," answered the other. "I shall be all right if my aim is good."

Smith was still uneasy about the slope of the ground. "Aim at him about here," he said, and indicated a spot on his own breast. Lippincott noticed the gesture and fixed his eyes at the corresponding spot on Tevis.

The two men stood with their weapons cradled in their arms. The sun was near its setting and its last red rays splintered among the trunks of the firs, baring the stretch that lay between the adversaries with vivid, sanguine color. The seconds stepped aside.

"Ready!" they answered.

"Fire! One! Two!"——

Tevis had thrown his shotgun up with the free swing of an expert. Lippincott had raised his easily and carefully. At the second count the former discharged his first barrel, but the crashing report left his opponent calm and unhurried. The editor aimed.

"Three!"

Lippincott pulled one trigger. Without pausing to note the result he fired his second shot immediately and it rang out almost in unison with Tevis' last barrel. The double explosion occurred just before James had finished the count with "Stop!"

Lippincott was standing where the light fell full upon him and both the seconds started to run toward him as the smoke cleared. He had staggered back a step and the right side of his face was tinted in a crimson deeper than that of the sunset glow. But he held himself erect and waved them back, pointing toward Tevis. They looked around in time to see the young man sink to the ground. When they reached his side he was dead, shot through the breast at the spot indicated by Smith at Lippincott's second shot. Tevis had fired high, as Smith had feared, and his first bullet had grazed the editor's scalp.

While Lippincott and his second hurried away Smith signalled members of the posse who had been attracted by the firing. The body of Tevis was interred where it had fallen. On the following day it was taken up, placed in a coffin and packed on a mule to Downieville. The public funeral services were most impressive and were attended by thousands, sentiment having swept around to the side of the unfortunate young man.

Lippincott fled to Nevada and did not venture back to Downieville for some years. When he returned he found few to welcome him or to take his hand. Miss Pellet, never ceasing to regret the tragedy of which she had been the unwitting cause, stood by him bravely, visited him in his exile and did everything in her power to resist the ebb of popular approval away from him.

At the outbreak of the civil war he joined the Union forces and was made a brigadier general for courage and distinguished services. Afterward he became State Auditor of Illinois, having found his own birthplace more congenial than the West, to which he never returned.

During his California days Lippincott was a close friend and one of the chief supporters of Senator David C. Broderick. His duel with Tevis is thus linked into the series of deadly affairs surrounding the life of that brilliant and ill fated statesman.

PISTOL BULLET IN HUSBAND'S LEG

Sensational Scene in a Brockville Hotel—Proprietor Ignored Order Not To Leave the House — Wife Said To Have Fired Three Times.

HUSBAND'S DEBAUCH

Examiner Special.

Brockville, Ont., Nov. 29.—Domestic troubles between the proprietor of the Windsor Hotel and his wife led to an attempt upon the life of Herbert C. Barker yesterday, his wife, it is alleged, having directed three revolver shots at him, one of which lodged in his thigh, directly below the hip.

Barker, it is said, after visiting Toronto for the Ottawa-Hamilton football match, went to Montreal, whence he returned a few days ago suffering from the effects of a debauch. Last night it is stated that he handled Mrs. Barker roughly. To-day, when he attempted to leave the hotel against the wishes of his wife, she is reported to have threatened his life if he made a move. He ignored the warning and the woman opened fire upon him at close range as he was going downstairs. The bullet took effect in the leg. Barker ran through a rear door into the yard. As he disappeared across the yard leading to a side street, two more shots were fired, with no effect.

Barker immediately left town, going to Ogdensburg, N.Y., where he is thought to have had his injury dressed, the extent of which is not known here. So far no arrests have been made.

Wellman Picks Flaw In Cook's Story And Stamps It A Fake

Explorer Who Was to Have Made Dash in a Dirigible Balloon Declares That Flaws in Data are Very Obvious to One Who Knows the Conditions.

Washington, Nov. 29.—Walter Wellman, whose preparations for a conquest of the North Pole in an airship recently were abandoned, issued last night a statement in which he analyzed the narrative of the two claimants of polar discovery, declaring that of Peary "precise, workmanlike, consistent, credible in every particular," and denouncing that of Dr. Cook as "self-evident, and even deliberate imposture."

"Cook's story is suspicious both in what it does tell and what it does not tell," Mr. Wellman declares. "He is generally vague and indefinite, but like most men of his class, altogether too precise at the wrong place. Nowhere does his story ring true. It is always an approximation of reality itself. This is true of his figures, his descriptions, everything.

"Those of us who have had a share in Arctic work," says Wellman, "and who have felt anxiety that no blot of fraud should stain the proud record of effort and sacrifice, had a first hope—that Dr. Cook would be able to demonstrate his good faith. This has dissolved in analysis of his own story. A second hope—that he was the victim of some hallucination or mental illness, and himself believed he had been to the pole, though, of course, he was not, vanishes in the light of earlier and subsequent events. There remains, though one says it with keenest regret, only the wretched alternative that the journey which he did make, and the report which he gave of it, were deliberately planned from the outset."

The gist of Mr. Wellman's findings is that with his meagre party and equipment Dr. Cook could not possibly have accomplished the feat for which he claims credit, that his astronomical data are too minutely precise to have been made under the claimed conditions in the field, and that the explorer's dash for the lecture platform and his acceptance of "crowns of flowers upon his head by innocent women and children before submitting his field records to scientific examination, all conspire to discredit him."

Mr. Wellman quotes from the records to show that Peary took his ship within 480 miles of the pole, advancing supplies and his party 47 miles closer during the autumn and spring, while Cook, started from Annoiok, 700 geographical miles from the pole, and went 170 geographical miles westward before turning north.

Peary mapped out his plans carefully for the advance and started with fifty or sixty men, 140 dogs and twenty-one sledges. He had four supporting parties, who kept open the back trail. Dr. Cook had no supporting party, says Wellman, except for the first three days. His party consisted of three men, twenty-six dogs and two sledges in the long dash he made.

"That which he claims to have done," declares Mr. Wellman, referring to Cook, "with his equipment and organization, was physically impossible."

Mr. Wellman points out that Cook made 68 miles in three days, despite bad weather, rough ice and the necessity of crossing a big lead, two miles wide, at a time when the sledge loads were heaviest. Cook, he says, thus traveled over a distance 27 per cent. greater at a speed 40 per cent. faster than Peary.

Mr. Wellman is especially caustic in his criticism of Dr. Cook for not turning over the records of his trip immediately to some scientific society. The records, he says, of an Arctic traveler need no revision, for, if they are honestly inscribed, they cannot be subject to revision. Such records are complete and perfect the moment they are written.

SCORE OF JAPANESE LABOURERS KILLED IN B. C. RAILWAY WRECK

Vancouver, B.C., Nov. 29.—Twenty Japanese were killed and fifteen injured so badly that several will die in the wreck of a work train on the Great Northern Railway, between Vancouver and Westminster, early yesterday.

The train left Vancouver at six o'clock on the way to Sumas. At 6.30, when within a mile of the city limits of New Westminster, the train ran into a washed-out culvert. The engine passed nearly over, then sagged back and Fireman Kent and Engineer Beattiger jumped, escaping injury. Immediately behind the tender was a Japanese bunk car in which 35 men lay, most of them asleep.

The engine settled back until it stood almost on end and the Japanese car was caught and smashed between the engine and tender. It was cut squarely in half. One half was crushed to kindling wood and the remainder smashed in on the sides, and the ends slid further into the gully.

Riding on the engine of the train was Geo. W. Kemp, a commercial traveler, a representative of W. H. Malkin & Co., Vancouver. His feet were crushed and he was internally injured. How he happened to be on the train is a mystery to officials.

That the Japanese work train, and not the crowded "Owl" passenger train from Seattle, that met disaster is simply a piece of luck for the passengers of the night express, which otherwise would not have been held at New Westminster.

At the point of the accident a small stream crosses the Great Northern tracks through a four by four foot culvert. A torrent of rain Saturday night swelled the volume of the stream and debris blocked the culvert. When the stream broke its banks, it started to eat through the filling, which carried the railway tracks and the stream forced through the embankment; a large section of fill was carried away, leaving the tracks unsupported.

Hurrying to cross the "Owl," waiting at New Westminster, Engineer Beattiger observed nothing wrong with the track and only when the track began to give way under them did he and his fireman jump.

Several city car lines are crippled to-day because of the ravages of streams of rain water. Basements are flooded all over the city, and it is raining harder than ever.

CITIZENS CALL UPON MR. MORROW TO BECOME A CANDIDATE

A number of prominent citizens waited upon Ald. W. G. Morrow this morning with a view of getting his consent to become a candidate for the mayoralty of 1910. The necessity of having an energetic mayor for next year was pointed out to Mr. Morrow and after the situation was talked over Mr. Morrow said that he would consider the matter for a few days before giving his decision. He stated that there were many others in Peterborough whom he thought more capable of filling the mayor's chair, and so far as he was concerned he would prefer to support some other person for the position. He suggested that they might be able to obtain a more suitable candidate by waiting a few days, but stated that he would let them know finally in a short time.

Charged With Wounding A Youth With A Knife On Saturday Night

Thomas Jenkins, a young man employed as a farm labourer in Smith, was charged at the police court this morning, with wounding Willie Sullivan with a knife on Saturday night last. The prisoner elected to be tried by a jury and pleaded not guilty. At first he pleaded guilty but later stated that he did not know whether he had done it or not as he was under the influence of liquor. Chief Rossel was not ready to proceed and the preliminary hearing was enlarged until Thursday morning. It appears that the assault took place while the complainant was cleaning some mud off Jenkins' coat. The wound is on the arm and is not of a serious nature.

LEVEL RAILWAY CROSSINGS.

The mania of Lancaster of Lincoln for legislation dealing with level railway crossing, is fully justified by the deplorable record of fatal accidents; but his position is not so sure when he seeks to entirely relieve municipalities from responsibility in respect of providing protection. On Thursday he moved the second reading of a bill to provide that municipalities shall not be required to contribute to the cost of protecting level crossings. His argument is that the railway creates the danger and should bear the whole expense of protection. In whose interest was the danger created? Primarily, of course in the interests of the railway, but chiefly in the interests of the public. The railways have in large part made Canada what it is. The people demand the railways, of which British Columbia, that voted to incur a responsibility of twenty-one million dollars to get a railway is a recent example. In equity, the railways should not be borne upon too hardly, and the inconveniences they occasion to the public should be set against the services they render. The municipalities of early railway history were glad to get railways with level crossings and it does not seem that there is any general demand on the part of municipalities for relief from the responsibility of removing the dangers of level crossings. The fair view seems to generally prevail that the benefitting party should practically recognise the benefit named, and the House thought similarly and disposed summarily, with Mr. Lancaster's proposal.

HASTINGS AND THE RAILWAYS.

It may not be unusual for the Dominion Parliament to pass retro-active legislation; but Mr. Northrup, of North Hastings, has found out that it is not easy to procure retro-prehensive legislation. Under cover of a bill introduced by him "to amend the Railway Act," he sought to compel the Grand Trunk Railway to "disgorge" the sum of $21,000, the amount of a subsidy granted by the Dominion Government in 1868-7 to the Belleville and North Hastings Railway. This railway was built and the subsidy earned. It followed that this railway was first fused with the Grand Trunk. Then a company was formed which fused with the Midland Railway; then immediately after, the new company was fused with the Grand Trunk Railway. The first fusion represented the Belleville and and North Hastings Railway, and the new company formed when the Midland was fused with that first represented by the three companies which had gone into the amalgamation, and the Grand Trunk, after the legislation, represented all four. In the course of this series of fusions, the Belleville and North Hastings, with all its rights as well as obligations, passed under control of the Grand Trunk Railway, to whose credit, as representing the absorbed company, the earned subsidy was naturally placed. It was pointed out by Hon. Mr. Aylesworth, that if, according to Mr. Northrup's contention, the payment of the subsidy was made to a company not entitled to it, this was done by the Government of his own party, of which Hon. Mackenzie Bowell, representing North Hastings, was a member, and, as such, knew all the conditions, and the justification or otherwise of the action taken. If there was anything wrong, about the disposition of the $21,000, he incurred with the Government of which he was a member, the responsibility of the wrong doing. Mr. Northrup, by means of an alleged amendment of the Railway Act sought to have this "robbery"—if robbery it was—committed twenty years ago by a Conservative Government—annulled by compelling the Grand Trunk Railway Company to "disgorge" money to which, by virtue of the legislation amalgamating the railway companies it was legally if not, indeed, morally entitled. That his attempt was voted down by a majority of nearly 50 was natural and inevitable, though it may entitle him to pose as a victim of the injustice of a "Grit" Government, which threw him back upon the Conservative Government, which created his grievance a score of years ago, and also, further, endear him as a champion, wordy, if not wise of his constituents, who have a sore spot in respect of railway bonuses.

BRITISH COLUMBIA'S BURDEN.

The result of the British Columbia elections brought joy to the ranks of the Conservative members of the House in Ottawa. Their divided counsels and the small measure of hope for office that glimmers upon the political horizon, reconcile them to welcoming success by proxy. Therefore the landslide or rather glacier-slide that engulfed the Liberals on Thursday, was a signal for unbridled rejoicing in the House. At the first despatch announcing the result, Mr George Taylor, chief Conservative whip, sent a telegram of congratulation to Mr McBride, and later in the House. Two British Columbia members brought up the matter of the Government's relations to the appointment of a Chief Justice of the Court of Appeal. This constituted an opening for unlimited desk-pounding. The British Columbia elections may justify party rejoicing, at Ottawa, but it does not not seem that it will be to the benefit of the British Columbia people, who have prostrated themselves under the wheels of a railway car of Juggernaut. They may need railways as a means of development, but it is possible to pay too high a price for even so great a boon. A people who have saddled themselves with a responsibility of more than $100 per head—21 millions for a whole population of 200,000, and proportionate to a burden of 650 millions for the Dominion—must have sanguine expectations of the fruits of the provincial self-sale of Nov. 25th. No doubt the electors were stampeded in the sudden rush of so splendidly audacious a railway bargain, and it is asserted that more direct and specific influences contributed in no small degree to the result. While the result of the British Columbia election may well turn out to be a provincial disaster and national humiliation, it is still cause for unreasoning party rejoicing. If the electors desire to invest Hon. Mr. McBride with despotic power, they can do so; but it is to be feared that they have voted in haste to repent at leisure.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

King Dickon III. offered his kingdom for a horse, but Dickey McBride, of British Columbia, was willing to offer his province for a locomotive.

The abandonment of the North Lanark petition against the return of Mr. Wm. Thoburn and of the counter petition against Mr. T. B. Caldwell, ends the list of protest trials in Ontario arising out of the last Dominion elections.

OBJECTS OF CANADIAN FORESTRY ASSOCIATION

Mr. Jas. Lawler of Toronto, secretary of the Canadian Forestry Association will give an illustrated lecture in the City Council Chambers to-morrew night upon the important subject of Canada's Forest Problems. Thes ubject vitally affects every citizen of Canada and no doubt many Peterborough people will avail themselves of the opportunity to hear Mr. Lawler. There is no admission charge and ladie sas well as gentlemen are invited to be present..

The Canadian Forestry Association was founded at a meeting of ten gentlemen in Ottawa in January, 1900. It was organized because of the need felt among men acquainted with Canadian forests, for the awakening of public interest and the educating of public opinion in this matter which vitally affects the life of the nation.

The first annual meeting was held in March, 1900, when the objects of the Association, to which it has devoted its energies ever since, were set out as follows:

(1) The exploration of the public domain, so that lands unsuitable for agriculture may be reserved for timber production.

(2) The preservation of the forests for their influence on climate, soil and water supply.

(3) The promotion of judicious methods in dealing with forests and woodlands.

(4) Tree planting on the plains, and on streets and highways.

(5) Reforestation where advisable.

(6) The collection and dissemination of information bearing on the forestry problem in general.

The usefulness and practical character of the work of the Association is shown by its steady growth among all classes and especially amongst men connected with lumber, pulp and other forest industries. The field of operations has gone on widening until it has now over two thousand members. This membership is national in character, covering the whole Dominion, and including men and women in all walks of life who believe that the conservation of the forests is vital to Canada's permanent progress. His Excellency, the Governor-General, has given his enthusiastic support and has the Prime Minister, while members of Parliament and leaders in provincial affairs have united in urging on the work.

The need for action is shown in many ways. The growing scarcity of timber all over the world is causing a continually increasing drain on the forests, and at the same time giving a rising market for forest products. The necessity and advantage of perpetuating and increasing Canada's supplies by proper methods, therefore, increase daily. On the other hand, the disastrous effect of reckless destruction of forests is not confined to the loss of the timber. great as that is. There is an equal, or perhaps greater, loss to agriculture. Forest destruction in lands has been followed by spring floods and summer droughts, which wash away the fertile elements of the soil, destroy or greatly reduce the waterpowers and injure inland navigation.

The revenue received from the forests by federal and provincial governments in Canada exceeds $4,500,000 per year, relieving taxpayers to that extent, while the aggregate trade in forest products, home and export, is estimated at $100,000,000. Many lines of manufacture and transportation are dependent upon the interests, while there are the great interests involved in furs, game and tourist travel. The loss of the forests would cripple the whole country.

People everywhere are beginning to realise that unless something is done, speedily, our forests will soon be gone, and that, on the other hand, under proper systems they can be made to yield increasing returns.

The patriotic work undertaken by the Canadian Forestry Association is to awaken people generally to a knowledge of the true state of affairs, and to agitate in every legitimate way for the adoption of better methods. A good deal has been accomplished. Government departments have been enlarged and strengthened, schools of forestry have been established farm tree planting has been undertaken in Eastern Canada and on the prairies and increased fire ranging and new methods of timber sales have been adopted.

At the same time only the fringe has been touched, while valuable forests which cannot be replaced in a century, if at all, are disappearing. What is most needed at the present time is an alert and informed body of public opinion to urge upon governments the adoption of improved methods and to support them in carrying out progressive measures.

Miss Mildred Guoin of New York, a member of the Cash Girl Company, was taken to the Nicholls Hospital last night. Cured of severe compound cold and cough by

Vinol

"From Dec. 20, '08, to March 1, '09, I had three bad colds, one on top of the other. I got so weak I could hardly get around. Nothing seemed to help me until I began to take Vinol. The change was magic. Three bottles completely fixed that compound cold and stopped the terrible cough—and what surprises me most, at the same time it cured me of a severe stomach trouble that has bothered me for 20 years. Vinol is certainly a wonderful medicine."

Mr. Toppan is one of Lynn's most prominent and highly respected merchants, whose word is as good as his bond.

The reason Vinol is so successful in such cases is because it contains the two most world famed tonics—the medicinal, strength-giving, body-building elements of Cod Liver Oil and Tonic Iron.

MICROBES WAR IN A BOTTLE

Multiply so Rapidly That the Bottle Explodes the Bottle.

Soon after the opening of the medical exhibition at the Horticultural Hall, Westminster, a large glass bottle which had been betraying symptoms of uneasiness exploded and scattered its contents, a creamy foam, over the rest of the stall.

Originally the bottle contained milk—just milk and a few millions typhoid bacillus, which lived and grew happily together in this culture-medium. Then, for demonstration purposes, a horde of 10,000,000 hungry monsters (known as the bacilli of Massol) were introduced into the cultured civilization of the unhappy typhoid tribes, and remorseless war was raging in a moment.

A storm in a teacup was nothing to battle in the bottle. The milk grew turgid with the bodies of the slain, and still the Massol militia murdered and devoured their victims. When a Massol bandit had filled himself to bursting point—he burst, and each of his 999,000 or 1,000,000 fragments became a hungry young Massol bacillus, which fought and ate in turn. Finally the milk foamed up with the rapidly multiplying generations of Massolites, and the bottle exploded.

The demonstration arose out of Professor Metchnikoff's claim that the bacillus of lactic acid (the Massol bacillus) destroys the bacilli which cause internal putrefaction of food. The Massol bacillus, he holds, by rendering the internal organs antiseptic, lengthens a man's life to an extraordinary extent and he quotes the exceptional number of centenarians in Bulgaria, where the inhabitants live largely on soured milk which contains this bacillus.

Massol bacilli are now presented in a novel form—that of chocolate creams, each containing 10,000,000 bacilli—and it was one of these chocolate creams which caused such havoc among the innocent typhoid microbes in the bottle.—London Daily Mail.

A REFERENCE TO SUNDAY'S MEETING.

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Sir,—After reading the local option editorial on Saturday night, under the heading, "It Will Paralyse Business," let me say: The Temperance people are bringing speakers here, to prove how beneficial it is in their cities; and asking why the anti local option people do not bring forward the proof of their statements—because they can not do so, or they would. In the face of this, I telephoned the Rev. Potter, and told him, if they would let me, that I would convince them, that local option is not necessary, here. But he declined, and would not let me speak on their platform; but said if I wanted to ask any questions I should send it to him in writing on the platform, and he would answer them. I declined and told him that I would demand a hearing at a meeting, in spite of him.

When the meeting started, Mr. Potter boldly stood up, and to prevent me from asking any questions, he said before the whole audience, that he would not allow any discussions, but that he was prepared, as he had a committee of competent men, to answer any questions asked in writing. When the speaker from Owen Sound stated that Owen Sound was a cleaner, purer and better city since local option is passed than it was before, and that before Owen Sound had a reputation of drumkards, and it was known by such a disgraceful name, as the "Cork-screw" town, and that the streets before local option passed were hideous and dangerous, and that boys were taken in, and sold liquor, and that they were morally disgraceful, or something like it. I then sent one question in writing, with the usher; and, after a while, I sent another question, and was waiting for an answer, when the speaker finished. I saw the gentlemen speakers receive my papers with the questions on, and they seemed to discuss what to do. When they had finished and not given me any reply, I simply asked them why they did not give me answer to my questions; certainly under the protest of some innocent fanatics. And what do you think the Rev. Mr. Potter, after about five minutes discussion, answered: That I should send my questions in plainer English, and that he had nobody to anwer such senseless questions, but at some other time, when he is prepared he will answer it. Now let us see; his first objection was, that I should write my questions in plainer English. I must tell him that I do not pretend to be a very good speller in English, but any man could understand it. Then he said he had nobody to answer such senseless questions. That sounds as though he knew what the questions were, as he said also, that he would answer when he was prepared. Then he stated before the meeting that he had a committee that would answer any questions. Now let us see were those questions senseless; so much so that the whole committee could not answer them. the questions were: After the speaker from Owen Sound had stated the conditions of the place before local option, I asked him in first question, "Had Peterborough such a notorious reputation as Owen Sound had before they passed local option. Are our streets hideous and dangerous at the present time, as they were in Owen Sound? Or is there any local option man who would take in any boy, and induce him to drink liquor? The second question was: "Are the people in Peterborough morally inferior, at the present time to the people of Owen Sound since local option? Have we more misery and crime, considering the size of the city, than Owen Sound has at the present time? Did not Peterborough grow larger in population and business than Owen Sound?" Those were my senseless questions, and I demand an answer to them. If they did not understand properly before, they understand them now. If they would only throw away their mad fanaticism and come to their senses and see for what reasons they are asking the people of Peterborough to pass local option, and to what class of people they are comparing the patrons of their churches they ought certainly to be ashamed in pretending to do the work of God, of truthfulness and justice. They are disgracing the city by comparing its people to such a class of people as there was in Owen Sound before local option passed.

It seems to me all their campaign is based on bluff only; and their intentions are by hook or by crook, under the mask of the Saviour, to pass local option here. Will they succeed? Well, I doubt it. As to the answer to my questions, I will tell you. They were in a pinch. They did not have man enough in them to say the truth. That Peterborough has not a reputation of drunkards and that there are only a very few, such as there are in any city. And that in Peterborough there is no danger at any time in the streets, and that in Peterborough there are no hideous conditions, as the speaker from Owen Sound stated. Peterborough stands morally not ineferior to Owen Sound, nor to any city on the globe, with the exception of a few fanatic temperance men. Peterborough is growing in population and is financally better than any local option town.

In the present state of affars, with such authorities as we have here, who are ready at a moment's notice to enforce the law, we do not need local option, here.

Sales Doubling Every Six Months

Wonderful Demand for a Wonderful Remedy.

During the past few years, the sales of "Fruit-a-tives" have doubled every six months. For the six months from January to July of this year, the sales of this popular medicine were more than twice greater than for any similar period since "Fruit-a-tives" was introduced to the public.

The National Drug & Chemical Company of Canada Limited, the largest wholesale drug house in the world—Lymans Limited of Montreal — and Lymans Brothers of Toronto — are buying "Fruit-a-tives" in 100 gross lots. 100 gross mean 14,400 boxes, which retail for $7,200.00. This gives some idea of the steady demand for these wonderful fruit liver tablets.

It is safe to say that "Fruit-a-tives" is on sale in every drug store and in departmental stores and general stores carrying medicines throughout the Dominion. Nor is the sale of "Fruit-a-tives" confined to Canada. In many parts of the United States, "Fruit-a-tives" is the standard family medicine and hardly a day passes that the Fruit-a-tives Company does not receive prepaid orders from our neighbors over the line.

The many testimonials, which have been published in the leading papers, are the most convincing evidence of the great value of "Fruit-a-tives".

50c a box—6 for $2.50—or trial box, 25c. If your dealer does not handle them, any quantity will be sent postpaid on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

PROGRAMME OF THE DAIRY MEETINGS

Eastern Ontario Dairymen's Association at Belleville in January.

The thirty-third annual convention of the Eastern Ontario Dairymen's Association will be held in Belleville on Jan. 5th, 6th and 7th, the meetings to be held in the City Hall, Belleville. They are very important from the standpoint of agriculturalist and dairyman and as many farmers as possible should avail themselves of this opportunity to be present. Whitley, of the Dairy Commission staff, Ottawa, on "Another Year of Cow Testing Work." Dr. Publow, of Cornell University, N.Y., will be a prominent speaker. G. G. Publow, Hon. Sydney Fisher, Minister of Agriculture, Ottawa. C. C. James, M. A., Deputy Minister of Agriculture, Toronto, Prof. J. H. Grisdale, of the Experimental Farm, Ottawa, J. A. Ruddick, Cold Storage and Dairy Commissioner, and in fact all the leading dairymen in the Province. The subjects will be of utmost interest to farmers. Mr. Geo. A. Gillespie is on the Board of Directors. Peterborough should be well represented at Belleville.

Here is given the most effective cough prescription known to the medical world. It is a mild laxative, too, and this is what a body needs when suffering with cough and cold on the lungs. A cough or cold indicates poisons in the system, causing inflammation and congestion. Nearly all cough syrups relieve, but make the trouble worse by their constipating effects. This prescription not only relieves quickly, but it cures any cough that is curable. Get one-half ounce fluid wild cherry bark, one ounce compound essence cardui, and three ounces syrup white pine compound. Mix in a bottle. Take for acute cough or bronchitis twenty drops every half hour for four hours. Then one-half to one teaspoonful three or four times daily. Give children less according to age. A few hours' treatment will cure and heal the throat and lungs of all but consumptives. Cut this out and give it to some friend who may need it to be saved from an early death by consumption.

A LECTURE IN COUNCIL CHAMBERS

Mr. Jas. Lawler Will Speak on Forestry Problems at Board of Trade Meeting.

This Tuesday evening, 30th inst., in the City Council Chamber, at 8 o'clock, sharp, under the auspices of the Peterborough Board of Trade, there will be delivered a lecture, illustrated by stereopticon views, on Canada's Vanishing Forests, and what should be done for their protection. The lecturer will be Mr. James Lawler, who is the Secretary of the Canadian Forestry Association. He is sent out by the Association for the purpose of showing Canadians by words and pictures the dangers that confront Canada from the ruthless burning and cutting away of her forests. All the civilised countries of the world are increasing their demands for timber. When these demands centre on Canada our forests will not last long unless we take measures to perpetuate and develop them. It is to point out how this may be done that the lecture is given. Besides the loss to trade from the destruction of the forests, agriculture, navigation and waterpowers are adversely affected, and game disappears, thus removing one of the best sources of revenue and recreation. These developments are being strikingly illustrated all over Canada at the present time and some of the pictures are of a startling character. The lecture is delivered free to the public and ladies as well as gentlemen are invited.

IS BEING ADMIRED

The display of china painting in Thos. Barrie's window, the work of Miss Flood, of the Conservatory staff, has been justly admired during the past week. A large jardiniere, bone in full bloom roses, dark tinting and gold; a fern pot, in conventional landscape, with green mat base, a large bon-bon dish with fancy head, and a dinner plate, in white roses, are the gems of the exhibit.

UNPARALLELED IN TELEGRAPH'S HISTORY

Destruction of Last Week's Storm Was Extremely Heavy.

Examiner Special.

Montreal, Nov. 29.—Officials of the C. P. R. telegraphs state that the past week has been the most disastrous to telegraph lines of any period since the establishment of commercial telegraphy on a large scale in Canada. The trouble was caused by sleet and frost weighing the lines down and snapping the poles. It is stated that from Monday to Wednesday the C. P. R. telegraphs had over two thousand poles broken in this way within a radius of two hundred miles east and west of Ottawa, the Ottawa, Toronto, and Brockville lines being the chief sufferers.

Chicago Is Now The Scene Of Strife Among Gypsy Bands

Just Another Echo of the Good Old Summer Time and the Band of Nomads in Need of Soap Who Stirred Things for a Week or so in This City.

HAPPY WHEN IN TROUBLE

Chicago, Nov. 24.—There is a feud between two gypsy tribes, with Chicago and vicinity as the scene of the conflict. The alleged kidnapping of 13 year old Amelian Johnson from her father, Ephraim Johnson in Elizabeth, N.J., three years ago, started it. The arrest of Zalecho Demetro on a charge of stealing the girl, aggravated the feud.

Now Nichols George, his wife and three children, said to be members of Johnson's band of gypsies, are under arrest and may be deported.

They were arrested yesterday when they arrived in Chicago, presumably to aid Johnson in getting his daughter back.

The Demetro nomads informed the authorities that the Georges were "smuggled" in from Canada after being denied admission by way of Detroit. The gypsy girl repeated on the stand before Judge Beitler that she did not want toreturn to her father, but preferred to live with the Demetros, because she loved to travel. Demetro declared his son was Amelia's husband, and that the girl's father had paid $1,000 for the bride. He said $400 was spent for a bridal feast. The girl and boy were held to the juvenile court.

Apparently the gypsies that visited Peterborough last summer have again stirred up trouble. After leaving here they gained considerable notoriety in Ottawa and the Citizen refers to their recent trouble as follows:

A contingent of the gypsies who troubled Ottawa and Hull some six months ago has reached Chicago and is distinguishing itself there by becoming mixed up in another kidnapping case. Nicholas George is the man who made himself famous by his generalship of the Hull tribe. The other names given in the Chicago story are somewhat strange but there seems to be little doubt that the trouble is over the same girl. She was bandied about between both tribes, the one stationed on the Richmond road and the other at the baseball grounds, Hull, and each band brought legal action against the other for kidnapping her. The case finally resulted in the little girl being handed over to a man and woman named Alexis of the Ottawa branch, who claimed they were her parents.

STOMACH DISTRESS SIMPLY VANISHES

No Dyspepsia, Gas, Heartburn, or Indigestion Five Minutes Later.

If you had some Diapepsin handy and would take a little now your stomach distress or Indigestion would vanish in five minutes and you would feel fine.

This harmless preparation will digest anything you eat and overcome a sour, out-of-order stomach before you realize it.

If your meals don't tempt you, or what little you eat seems to fill you or lies like a lump of lead in your stomach, or if you have heartburn, that is a sign of Indigestion.

Ask your Pharmacist for a 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin, and take a little just as soon as you can. There will be no sour risings, no belching of undigested food mixed with acid, no stomach gas or heartburn, fullness, or heavy feeling in the stomach, Nauseau, Debilitating Headaches, Dizziness, or Intestinal griping. This will all go, and besides there will be no undigested food left over in the stomach to poison your breath with nauseous odours.

Pape's Diapepsin is a certain cure for out-of-order stomachs, because it prevents fermentation and takes hold of your food and digests it just the same as if your stomach wasn't there.

Relief in five minutes from all stomach misery is at any drugstore waiting for you.

These large 50-cent cases contain more than sufficient to thoroughly cure almost and case of Dyspepsia, Indigestion or any other stomach disturbance.

Modern Christmas Gift-Giving

Gifts of Service for All

GIFT-GIVING at Christmas time has become modernized to a great extent. To-day the average person takes into consideration, in choosing a gift for a friend, the real value and service such remembrance will be to the recipient. It's altogether different now from what it was a few years ago. Then, anything that appealed to the donor as something that would be kept for an unlimited length of time was quite suitable. Not so now—the chief object is to give something of service—something that will be used and appreciated and give pleasure to the person receiving it. Christmas comes every year, and every year you have the same chance to show your goodfellowship, so, why not give a gift that will fill a desire that you know your friend has, perhaps a little better than he or she would pay if buying for his or her self? Give this a thought, and have a look through our fine stocks of Men's and Women's Gifts, such as: Men's Smoking Jackets, Dressing Gowns, Women's Long and Short Kimonas, Women's Net and Silk Waists, etc. These are always good—Men's and Women's Umbrellas, House Slippers, Evening Dress Pumps, and innumerable other articles that would fill this whole page. Just come and look through the different departments, there are hundreds of good suggestions.

Remember—there are only 22 days left in which to do your Christmas Shopping. Shop Early—you'll get better choice, better service and more pleasure.

MUSIC AND DRAMA.

Marguerite Clark, who appeared at the Grand Opera House in "The Wishing Ring," delighting a large house by her clever acting, tells the following story, which partly concerns herself:

"Three years ago, while playing in Boston I was staying at the Parker House, and opposite there is a church yard or a school yard liberally planted with good-sized trees. Looking out of my window one day I saw at least five hundred people in and around the place intently watching the fate of a poor little sparrow.

"The bird had got entangled in a piece of string attached to one of the boughs of a big tree. No one but an eye witnesser could imagine the intensity of the sight—hundreds of voices were raised in suggestions of how to release the bird which kept flying as far as the string would permit, only to get weak and hang helpless from the bough. Ladders were brought to cover the trunk of the tree and five or six boys volunteered to climb, but when fairly on the bough they could not reach the frail end of the limb to which the string was attached.

"Sticks and stones were brought into play, and alike unsuccessfully long poles used for high ceiling electric light work were brought, two of them lashed together reached the bough but failed to be of any use. I was leaning out of the window and helping the crowd make suggestions and applauding when some effort appeared to promise result. An idea struck me—why not burn the string?

"I flew downstairs and secured a candle, shouting 'I can save that bird.' The crowd made way for me. The candle was quickly tied to the two long poles before mentioned; the torch was lighted and in less than a minute the string was burned and the sparrow fell to the ground. The poor little thing was exhausted, but I nursed it back to life, and in a short time had the pleasure of seeing it fly from my hands and perch among the leaves—the crowd dispersed, and it is safe to say that every human heart was touched and made happy by the fortunate end of the incident."

"Divorce" Again.

F. C. Whitney announces that he has arranged with the Messrs. Shubert for a series of special matinees at the Lyric Theatre of Paul Bourget's drama, "Divorce," which Bourget and Andre Cury dramatized from Bourget's novel, "Une Divorce," and the English version of which has been prepared by Stanilaus Stange. The first performance will occur on Monday afternoon, November 29, and thereafter matinees will be given every day except Saturday, when the stage will be occupied by the regular matinees of Mr. Whitney's production, "The Chocolate Soldier."

Mr. Whitney presented "Divorce" last season in a few cities, including Montreal, Toronto and Detroit, intending to come into New York after a try-out of ofur weeks on the road. However, there was no metropolitan theatre available at the time, and rather than jeopardize the future of such a valuable property he withdrew the play and has brought it out again at this more favourable opportunity now available through his arrangements with the Messrs. Shubert.

"Divorce" was the sensation of the theatrical season last year in Paris, where the question of the marital relation is quite as much an issue as in this country to-day. So great was the interest aroused by this drama that Le Matin alone published, within the period of several months, more than 200 columns of controversial letters called forth by the theme of the play, the keynote of which is that the great danger arising from divorce lies with the children of the disrupted families.

REV. DR. O'BRIEN HAS SECURED RESIDENCE

Services at Church of the Sacred Heart Were Largely Attended.

The first Sunday of his pastorate must have been very pleasing to Rev. Dr. O'Brien yesterday at the Church of the Sacred Heart. The masses at 8 a.m. and 10.30 a.m., were largely attended, and the church was filled at Vespers, when Bishop O'Connor delivered a special sermon. Next Sunday morning he will preach at the 10.30 o'clock mass. The choir was assisted by Miss Annie and Nellie Simons and Messrs. Ed. Keon and J. H. Quinlan of St. Peter's. The new church choir has begun to practise, and with the assistance of some of the members of St. Peter's choir, should soon become efficient. Mr. John L. Armstrong has been appointed organist and presided yesterday most satisfactorily. Rev. Dr. O'Brien intends to visit all his parishoners, and at the same time to take a census of the people under his charge. His residence is the second house on the south side of Westcott street, east of Aylmer street. It will be ready for occupancy in a short time.

CHILDREN IN LINE

Temperance Procession Yesterday Was Unique in the History of Peterborough.

A GREAT TURN OUT

Unique indeed was the procession that passed through the streets of Peterborough yesterday as the big feature of the local observation of the World's Temperance Sunday. Despite the disagreeable footing and the threatening skies the turnout of children and their elders in the procession was even larger than was hoped for, while the citizens generally showed their interest in the event by deeply lining the route of the procession.

The northern column started at the George St. Methodist church and went by way of Water St. to Murray St., taking in the St. Paul's Sunday school en route and then along Murray to Aylmer and along that thoroughfare to Charlotte St., where the southern column joined the procession and the united bodies marched along Charlotte St. and thence to the Opera House. The schools marched by classes, with the teachers in attendance and at frequent intervals appropriate banners such as "The Boy or the Bar, Which?" and "Vote for Us," were carried: When the Opera House was reached it was found that there would not be room for all the procession so that the rear guard marched on past the building and along King St. to the Charlotte St. Methodist church, where an over-flow meeting was held.

The procession was headed by the Salvation Army Band and included the following Sunday Schools of the city: Grace Methodist, George St. Methodist, Mark St. Methodist, St. Paul's, Bethany Tabernacle, Gospel Hall, Murray St. Baptist, St. Andrew's, Salvation Army, St. James' Methodist, Knox Presbyterian, Charlotte St. Methodist and Park St. Baptist.

WAS FINED FIVE DOLLARS TO-DAY

Was Unable to Properly Drive a Team of Horses on Saturday.

James Hurd, a farmer, was fined five dollars at the police court this morning for being unable to drive a conveyance on Saturday, November 27th. Hurd pleaded guilty. He was given ten days in which to pay his fine.

C.P.R. SIDING INTO NEW WAREHOUSE

The work on the siding into the Peterborough Hardware Company's warehouse is being pushed forward and within a short time should be completed. The building itself is going up rapidly and will be an acquisition to the business appearance of the city in the vicinity of the C. P.R. station.

YOU WILL NOT BE DECEIVED

That there are cheats and frauds in plenty everybody knows; but it is seldom that any large business house is guilty of them, no matter what line of trade it follows. There can be no permanent success of any kind based on dishonesty or deception. There never was and never will be. The men who try that are simply fools and soon come to grief—as they deserve. Now, many persons are nevertheless, afraid to buy certain advertised articles lest they be humbugged and deluded; especially are they slow to place confidence in published statements of the merits of medicines. The effective remedy known as is as safe and genuine an article to purchase as flour, silk or cotton goods from the mills of manufacturers with a world-wide reputation. We could not afford to exaggerate its qualities or misrepresent it in the least; and it is not necessary. It is palatable as honey and contains all the curative properties of pure Cod Liver Oil, extracted by us from fresh cod livers, combined with the Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites and the Extracts of Malt and Wild Cherry; and how valuable such a blending of these important medicinal agents must be is plain to everybody. It is beyond price in Anaemia, Scrofula, Weakness and lack of Nervous Tone, all Lung Troubles and Impurities of the Blood. Science can furnish nothing better—perhaps nothing so good. Dr. McK. of Canada says: "I have used it in my practice and take pleasure in recommending it as a valuable tonic and reconstructive." It is a remedy that can afford to appeal to its record and represents the science and knowledge of bright and aggressive medical investigation. Like all good things it is imitated. "You cannot be disappointed in it." Sold by chemists throughout the world. Warne Drug Co.

A GUARANTEED CURE

For Indigestion and Dyspepsia

There is no hesitation or quibbling about the claims which the Coleman Medicine Company make for their wonderful "Little Digesters". They come out straight with the statement that "Little Digesters" will positively cure even chronic Indigestion or Dyspepsia, as well as Heartburn and Sour Stomach.

Of course they would not make such positive statements, or give such a guarantee, if they had not proved, beyond the shadow of a doubt, that "Little Digesters" WILL CURE.

"Little Digesters" do it simply and naturally, too, by helping out the weakened stomach — supplying just what it needs in the process of digestion, and enabling it to assimilate the food. Soon the whole system regains its vigor, and the stomach needs no further help.

"Little Digesters" are put up in little red boxes, sold for 25c by your druggist, or mailed by the Coleman Medicine Co., of Toronto. 29

RETURNED TO THEIR HOMES IN ENGLAND

James, two Englishmen who have been out in this country about two years, left this morning for New York, from where they will sail on the steamship "Lusitania" for the Old Country. Mr. Cuffe is going to his home in Sherborne, Dorset, and Mr. James goes to Croydon, near London. They worked as carpenters here and out of their earnings have saved enough to return to England and will after spending Christmas and the New Year there, return to Canada with their wives. They like this country and have done well here.

ASSAULT CHARGED

Hired Man of Wealthy Resident of St. Davids Named Lowrey Has a Fight With His Master and In Struggle Latter Is Kicked by a Horse—Lowrey Badly Injured —Another Man a Witness.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Nov. 29.—Charged with assaulting Edward Lowrey, who, since the date of the quarrel (Nov. 19), has not recovered, and is in a precarious condition, Robert Orr was arrested last night by Inspector W. H. Mains and Detective McNamara of the Ontario police. Mr. Lowrey is proprietor of the Queenston Quarry Co. of St. Davids, and is a well-known and wealthy man. Orr is his hired man.

The arrest followed a six hours' examination of the arrested man by Inspector Mains. An operation, which was performed yesterday, which revealed the extent of Mr. Lowrey's injuries, and his serious condition, is believed to have been the determining factor of the arrest.

The operation was trepanning of the skull and was decided on as a final expedient. Mr. Lowrey has been unconscious for ten days. On the morning of the 18th he was in his drive shed, with two hired men, John McGee and Orr. According to the statements of these men, made yesterday, Lowrey directed McGee to do a certain piece of work. McGee refused, stating this work did not come within the scope of his duties.

Lowrey became angry at this refusal, and after a quarrel of words, the two men sprang at each other. McGee held a pitchfork in his hands but as Lowrey approached he threw it away, and met him with his fists. The struggle carried the men near the horses on the opposite side of the shed, and on the slippery concrete floor the men slipped. Lowrey fell with his back turned to the horse stalls, and while he was struggling to get up, McGee says one of the horses kicked him, knocking him unconscious. Both McGee and Orr agree on this point.

Orr says he was standing near the men during the fight, and went to place the pitchfork where neither of them could get hold of it. He says that as he came back he saw the horse kick Lowrey. Evidently the police believe McGee could not have caused the injuries, for they released him after obtaining his statement. Orr, however, was arrested charged with committing grievous assault with intent. The fact that one of the doctors believe that the injuries were not caused by the kick of a horse but by a severe blow from a hard instrument, and that Mr. Lowrey's recovery is doubtful, places the prisoner in a serious position.

He will appear before Magistrate Fraser to-day.

Farmer Is the Boss.

Calgary, Nov. 29.—Grain men find that recent bounteous harvest has placed farmers in a position where they can dictate their own terms and prices regarding grain.

From all sections of the district comes reports that even the price of oats is much in excess of this time last year, still farmers are holding this crop in confidence that they will get the price of fifty cents to sixty cents per bushel as ruling last year, will maintain next year. Even wheat is being held by a large number who expect that price next spring will reach $1.50 per bushel for seed wheat.

The argument is that the influx of settlers, even now taking place, will be increased throughout the winter and spring months, and result in a very marked demand for seed wheat.

Eliminated the Girls.

Victoria, B.C., Nov. 29.—According to news brought by the Bellerophen, the Japanese Government ordered that Geisha girls be eliminated from entertainments given for Field Marshal Lord Kitchener, owing to an idea that he was a woman-hater.

Steamer Is Missing.

San Juan, Porto Rico, Nov. 29.—It is nineteen days since the Herrera line steamer Maria Herrera left Santiago, Cuba, with a cargo of cattle for Ponce, Porto Rico. The steamer is now 17 days overdue and it is believed that she has foundered.

Women

Weak, lame or aching backs are the first sign of Kidney Trouble.

Under ordinary conditions they ought to be strong and ready to bear the burdens of life.

It is hard to do housework with a weak and aching back. Backaches come from sick kidneys, and what a lot of trouble sick kidneys cause.

But they can't help it. If more work is put on them than they can stand it is not to be wondered that they get out of order.

Weak back is simply a warning from the kidneys and should be attended to immediately so as to avoid years of terrible suffering from kidney troubles.

Doan's Kidney Pills will cure you in the same way as they have cured thousands of others.

Miss Alberta B. Clarke, Stoney Creek, Ont., writes:—"I was troubled with kidney trouble for several years; my back was weak, I had such terrible headaches, and was so restless I could not sleep at night and tried everything without any benefit. Meantime a friend advised me to try Doan's Kidney Pills, so I got four boxes and they completely cured me. I now feel as well as I ever did and would advise everyone suffering from Kidney Disease to try them."

Price 50 cents per box, or 3 for $1.25, at all dealers or The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

In ordering specify "Doan's."

FAVORS LOCAL NAVY.

Sir Charles Tupper Says Canadian Fleet Should Be Started.

London, Nov. 29.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The Times publishes a letter from Sir Charles Tupper to R. L. Borden, dated Nov. 23, on the question of the Canadian navy, which says that all that is required is that the Government of the day should carry out the resolution passed in the House of Commons at Ottawa last session, pledging Parliament to proceed vigorously with the construction of a Canadian navy.

Sir Charles cannot understand the demand for Dreadnoughts and cannot avoid thinking that a fearful responsibility will rest on those who disturb or destroy the compact entered into at the Imperial Defence Conference on this vitally important question.

The Times editorially says: "Sir Charles Tupper's letter should contribute to a strengthening of the concord between Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Borden on the naval question."

The Times also says: "Laurier's speech of the 15th contains the true ideal of imperial unity."

Shot Girl's Father.

Camilla, Ga., Nov. 29.—T. J. Sellers, a wealthy farmer, was shot to death in the public road ten miles southwest of here Saturday, just as he succeeded in the pursuit of his daughter, who had eloped with Columbus Huey. Leaving his body in the road, Huey and Miss Sellers, it is alleged, went on, driving rapidly in a buggy, intending to complete the elopement with a wedding.

Huey was captured late last night with the girl several miles from the scene of the shooting. He is in jail here.

The girl declares that they have been married and she will not attend her father's funeral.

She said that her father threatened to kill her unless she should go back home with him, when he caught the eloping couple, and that he put his hand to his pocket as if to draw a weapon.

She says Huey then fired, killing Sellers instantly.

Woman Shoots Husband.

Brockville, Nov. 29.—A shooting affray took place yesterday at the Windsor Hotel, on Perth street, when Mrs. Herbert C. Barker, in a fit of rage fired thrice at her husband, one bullet imbedding itself in his thigh.

Barker had been drinking heavily and his wife was doing her best to sober him up. He expressed his intention of going down town and, failing to heed the warning of her intention to shoot, the tragedy was enacted.

Though the police have been acquainted of the affray last night, no arrests have been made. Barker cannot be found and his wife is in a highly excited condition.

The shooting was preceded by a fight, which took place Saturday night in their apartments, where Barker seriously assaulted his wife, whose face is badly marked and bruised in many places.

French General Shot.

Paris, Nov. 29.—A man believed to have had an imaginary grievance against the war department, shot and seriously wounded Gen. Verand yesterday on the steps of the Hotel Continental, as the general was entering to attend a banquet.

The man was overpowered and placed under arrest.

Later it was learned that he had mistaken Gen. Verand for Gen. Brun, Minister of War.

Hundreds ran in the direction of the shots, and several of the officers sprang upon Gen. Verand's assailant who proved to be an Algerian.

He was overpowered with difficulty and was found to be a perfect walking battery of revolvers and daggers. Gen. Verand received bullets in the neck and forehead, and his condition is considered dangerous.

Coal Strike Broken.

Ottawa, Nov. 29.—F. A. Acland, Deputy Minister of Labor, who investigated conditions in Nova Scotia relative to the strikes at the coal mines brought by the United Mine Workers of America, says:

"The strike at Glace Bay appears to be practically broken, but the military force is likely to be retained for some time to come. At Inverness the strike is still more definitely broken but military protection is still considered desirable. There is a considerable number of men on United Mine Workers' relief lists. At Springhill no attempt is made to work the mine and operations are apparently at a standstill for an indefinite period, with the promise of the worst results to the industry and the community concerned."

Mme. Steinheil In England.

London, Nov. 29.—Mme. Steinheil who recently was acquitted in Paris of the charge of murdering her husband arrived in London yesterday, traveling under the name of Mme. Dumont.

The woman evaded the reporters and proceeded to a hotel.

Traced to this place, she declined to see anybody, and the manager of the hotel, upon learning her identity, requested her to leave.

Conservative Nominations In Dufferin

Orangeville, Nov. 29.—No time will be lost by the Conservatives of Dufferin in bringing out a candidate to succeed the late member, Dr. Barr in the House of Commons. President Paul Gallaugher of the Conservative Association of Dufferin has issued a call to the faithful to assemble at Shelburne on Friday, Dec. 10, for the purpose of nominating a candidate for the position.

Strikers' Families Evicted.

Ludlow, Mass., Nov. 29.—The eviction of families of strike operatives of the Ludlow Manufacturing Associates from cottages owned by the concern began Saturday, when a dozen or more families were forced to leave their homes and their goods piled in the muddy streets. A force of about 300 deputy sheriffs, policemen and detectives were on hand.

Great Cartoonist Ill.

London, Nov. 29.—Edward Linley Sambourne, who succeeded Sir John Tenniel as chief cartoonist for Punch in 1901, is dangerously ill.

We Cannot Improve It

Taylor's Infants' Delight represents over forty-three years of constant effort along one line—the effort to make a perfect soap.

A liberal reward is waiting for any one who can tell us how to improve it in the slightest. We ourselves believe it to be perfect and can conceive of no way of improving it. The choicest oils from the Orient enter into its composition—olive oil from the first pressing of selected fruits—cocoanut oil, the best the market affords, and that refined with extra care—and with all this just sufficient otto of roses—that choicest perfume from the Sultan's Domain—to impart a delicate, wholesome fragrance to the skin. In we have produced a soap so mild and soothing—so wonderfully cleansing and healing, that it is universally used in homes of wealth and refinement where the best is considered none too good for the toilet.

We ask you to try at least one bar and know that we have not exaggerated its goodness.

THE EASTERN CRITICS ALL PICKED OTTAWA TO WIN

In view of what actually happened some of the following prophecies made before Saturday's game, sound very funny:

Dr. Nagle, Ottawa—"Ottawas will smother them on the line. Their backs will never get a chance to show up. We should win by about 12 to 3."

Fred Carling, Ottawa—"I cannot see how Ott wa can lose. They are better in every way."

Dave Mulligan, Ottawa — "Ottawa once more, unless I am wrong. We should win out with five or six points to spare."

D'Arcy McGee, Ottawa—"It looks like Ottawa to me, but Varsity will make the boys play their hardest."

Jack Williams, Ottawa — "Never was feeling more confident. We'll win, but it will be a close score."

Geo. Mulligan, Ottawa— "No team in the country can beat the Ottawas they way they are now playing. Varsity won't have a chance."

Walter Nixon, Ottawa — "Varsity may run us close, but Ottawa will win out, if the boys play as well as they did against Tigers."

Harvey Pulford, Ottawa — "I expect a hard game again, but think Ottawas are capable of doing the trick again."

Chaucer Elliott, Montreal—"Made such a bum guess last week, that I have ceased to be a prophet."

L. N. Bate, Ottawa—"Ottawas are going too well to be beaten now. But say, that Varsity team should not be held too lightly."

George Kennedy, Ottawa—"Experience will count; we have it on our side."

Bobby Robinson, Hamilton—"While Varsity are a good team, I believe any fourteen in the Interprovincial could beat them. Ottawa all the way."

Harry Griffith, Varsity—"They will never hold our backs, and Varsity will be successful after a close battle."

"Cully" Robertson, Toronto—"Never saw an Ottawa team lose yet after such a big win as was that over Tigers."

Jack Newton, Varsity—"Ottawa will get the biggest surprise of their lives when they go up against our scrimmage and wing line. I fully expect to be captain of the Canadian championship team Saturday night."

Jim Vaughan, Ottawa—"They could not beat us even with Jack Johnson Jim Jeffries and Sanley Kethcel in their scrimmage, and Tommie Burns and 'Solid' Muldoon at inside wings."

THE EXTRAS IN DEMAND

SPLENDID SERVICE

The Examiner's enterprise in issuing an extra on Saturday giving a full report of the big Ottawa-Varsity rugby game in Toronto was much appreciated by the football enthusiasts in Peterborough and the extras were quickly snapped up. There was keen interest in the game in Peterborough and the Examiner extra was just what the fans were looking for. It was another reminder of the fact that the Examiner believes in giving its readers what they want when they want it.

The arrangements made by the Examiner were so complete that the people of Peterborough had the whole story before them before the teams in Toronto had doffed their muddy canvas garments. An expert sporting writer stationed at the side lines at Rosedale carefully watched the play and his impressions were wired to the Examiner as fast as expert operators at both ends of the line could handle the stuff. The C.P.R. telegraph company looked after the transmitting of the messages and did their work rapidly and well.

The result was that The Examiner's last edition was on the street at 5.35 with a complete two thousand word account of the big battle, showing how each point was made and giving the fans a moving picture account of the principal features of the game about which every football enthusiast in Canada was talking on Saturday. It was the best running account of a sporting event that this paper has been able to give its readers, and many compliments upon it have been heard.

WRESTLING

An interesting wrestling bout was pulled off on Saturday afternoon at the Y. M. C. A. between Ed. Searight and Allan Stabler of the Quaker Oats staff. Stabler won by two straight falls by securing toe holds in each fall. Time, 3.45 and 4.16. Referee, Mr. McLaughlin.

RUGBY

These 50 and 60 and 70 yard punts may take place on the gridiron occasionally, but they are mighty scarce if the average distance punted in almost any football game is correctly reported. Take the records of the punting as found in college publications, and the other newspapers and the average distance will be found to vary from 30 to 40 yards. An average of 40 yards is bigger than usual, so it is evident that kicks of 50 yards are few and far between.

To the spectator it appears as if the kicks were going around 50 yards, when in reality they may be averaging not more than 35 yards. The distance gained on a punt isn't measured from where it is kicked, but from where the ball is put in play, a matter of from eight to ten yards every kick.

In the Yale-Amherst game there were two punters much above the ordinary in ability. Coy, of Yale, and Fitts, of Amherst. In fact, Coy is the longest and steadiest kicker on the field to-day, and yet according to the Amherst Student, Coy's average distance punted in the first half was only 29½ yards. Amherst's average was 22 yards. In the second half Yale averaged 33¼ yards a punt, and Amherst 20.

Statistics in the West, if they be reliable, show longer kicking in the Minnesota-Chicago game. Minnesota's punting averaged 42 yards to Chicago's 33. An average of 40 yards a punt is an average much above the ordinary. Forty yards doesn't seem so much a kick at first thought, but when you consider that the ball sails out of sight of the chalk marks the distance seems greater. In any event it is evident that 50 yard punters for a steady thing exist chiefly in the imagination.

HEAVY COLDS

During the census year in United States there were nearly seventy-seven thousand deaths due to pneumonia, and although consumption leads this by 62,000, pneumonia is responsible for more deaths than diphtheria, scarlet fever, smallpox, and cancer combined. The trouble is that people are too careless about colds—let them run on—grow bigger every day—finally old pneumonia steps in.

The very best thing to keep handy in every household is Nerviline, which you can depend on for curing colds. It affords certain relief and a quick cure. It has more potency, greater penetrating and curative power than any other liniment.

Nerviline Not Only Prevents, It Quickly Cures

When a cold is starting, give the chest and throat a vigorous hand rubbing with Nerviline, gargle the throat with Nerviline, and take a good stiff dose in hot water, you'll be surprised how fast the cold will disappear. Of course the chest should be protected by a Nerviline Porous Plaster, which will absorb all congestion and inflammation. You won't need to fear pneumonia, Grippe, Bronchitis, or cold of any kind if you keep Nerviline handy.

IS NOW THE APPLE KING

H. B. Tronson, of Eagle Point, Oregon, a native of England, born in Devonshire, was designated quality apple king of America by Professor H. E. Van Deman, of Washington, D.C., head of a board of five judges and experts of international reputation, at the second National apple show in Spokane, Washington, November 16 to 20, when he won the sweepstake of $1,000 and a first class prize of $250 with a car of 630 boxes (bushels) of Spitsenburg Esopus, the pick of 2,500 boxes gathered from a five-acre orchard of 16 years' old trees. He sold the prize winning fruit at $5 a box, or $3,150 for the entry, which, with the premiums of $1,250, brought a total of $4,400. The actual commercial value of the car of fruit in Spokane was $1,830, while the cost of production, including picking, grading, packing, boxing and freight to Spokane, was about $650.

Mr. Tronson and his partner, E. F. Guthrie, a native of Scotland, composing the firm of Tronson & Guthrie, own 300 acres of land in the Rogue River valley in southern Oregon, where they have 126 acres in apple and pear trees. They acquired the property for $11,000 three years ago, since which time it has increased in value of $60,000. It is not for sale.

Mr. Tronson came to America about 25 years ago, settling first in Montreal, afterwards going to Winnipeg, Manitoba, where he served with the 90th Battalion Winnipeg Rifles during the Riel rebellion. He went to Eagle Point three years ago from Portland, where he handled jute and flour for 10 years. He and his partner have made a success of their orchards. This is the first time they have exhibited their fruit in competitions open to the world.

Messrs. Tronson and Guthrie have an ideal country place. They are within four miles of the Rogue river, which teems with steel-head trout, ranging from four to 12 pounds in weight. The fish are game and give excellent sport with the fly. There is also fine deer, quail and pheasant shooting within three miles of their home. Little Butte Creek, which runs through their holding, is a natural haunt for wild ducks and geese. They have a high-power automobile and other accessories and their home, cared for by two English servants, is in the midst of a sportsman's paradise and an orchard that is the equal of any on the American continent. The orchard is irrigated twice a year, during the growing season, with water from the Creek.

The Spokane show, where Mr. Tronson won his new title and the chief prizes, was national in character, 23 states in the Union and two Canadian provinces, British Columbia and Nova Scotia, being represented in 2,160 entries in 20 classes for premiums aggregating $25,000, ranging from $1,500 in the sweepstake for carloads, of which there were 13, to single plates of five apples, taking prizes of $5 for each variety. There were 10 limited entries, 39 free-for-all, 73 state and foreign country groups, 98 ten-box, 136 five-box, 278 single box, 28 unnamed varieties, 15 pyramids of big apples, 11 largest apples and 1,328 plates, aggregating more than 1,500,000 apples.

The exposition, the most pretentious of its kind ever attempted in the world, was a success in every way. The attendance was well over the 100,000 mark, and included visitors from every state, territory and province on the continent, also buyers from England, Germany and France. Canada was represented in many of the box and plate classes and carried off its share of prizes. The growers of British Columbia sent five boxes of Northern Spy apples to His Majesty King Edward VII, and also joined with their cousins in consignments of fruit for President Taft and the Emperor of Japan. Howard Elliott, head of the Northern Pacific railway company, was president of the show, the secretary-manager being Ren. H. Rice, of Spokane.

Six Chinese hidden in a canal boat loaded with pulpwood, were found last night at Rouse's Point, New York, by immigration and customs inspectors. All were arrested, together with the captain of the boat, Otto Petersen, who is charged with smuggling Chinese into the country.

A man's body, found in the river under the Waterloo street bridge at Stratford Saturday morning proved to be that of Alex Connolly, of 571 Mornington street, who had been missing since Thursday night. Late that night he was seen going in the direction of the river in an intoxicated condition.

Jewish Brokers Arrested.

Berlin, Nov. 29.—The Volks Zeitung publishes despatches from Samerfa, Russia, saying that the Russian authorities have suddenly arrested all the Jews of the Stock Exchange.

The wholesale arrests were caused by the local governor, who was seized with the idea that the Jews should not be allowed to do business on the exchange.

The Volks Zeitung also says that an anti-Semitic agitator, delivering a speech from the altar of a church at Optoschek, Russia, inciting the people to massacre the Jews, struck down a priest at the foot of the altar when the clergyman tried to prevent his speaking.

The agitator then continued his harangue with the applause of the congregation.

Partridge In Coffin.

Lansing, Mich., Nov. 29.—An attempt to ship 500 partridges in a burial casket from Michigan to Milwaukee in violation of the game laws was frustrated by a keen-nosed hunting dog yesterday.

Deputy Game Warden Harrington was at the railway station at Flatwood when a box was brought in for shipment. The intending shipper, armed with a death certificate, was conversing with the ticket agent when the game warden's dog scented the birds, and came to a "point," focusing his gaze on the box. An investigation disclosed 500 plump partridges instead of a corpse.

The birds were confiscated, and the man who had brought them to the station disappeared.

Burial For Cat.

Windsor, Nov. 29.—A pet cat belonging to Alexander Abar of Sandwich died on the house boat on which Abar and his wife are traveling towards New Orleans, and was sent by express from Lawrenceburg, Indiana, to W. H. Everitt, a Windsor butcher, for interment in the private burial plot, Abar maintains near Sandwich.

The owner of the deceased pet sent a liberal check to pay expenses and Everett carried out the instructions to the letter, depositing the remains alongside of other pets of Abar, that have passed out of life into the happy hunting ground of the animal kingdom.

Killed by Log Falling.

Belleville, Nov. 29.—David Hamilton was accidentally killed while at work in Wilson Spurr's camp north of Maynooth.

Hamilton was engaged in driving a team, and was standing at a skidway when another team drove up to unload.

The end of one of the logs struck a tamarack stump and broke about 20 feet off the top of it.

Hamilton's companions call to him to run, but thinking that it was his team which was in danger, he sprang for the lines and ran directly under the falling top, which struck him, killing him instantly.

Diverted Gas From Meter.

Tiffin, Ohio, Nov. 29.—On informations said to have come through a death-bed confession of his helper in tapping a main, Joseph Loudenslager, a wealthy miller, is being sued by the Logan Natural Gas & Fuel Co. for $3,078.87.

The company alleges that Loudenslager diverted 25,675,000 cubic feet of gas in six years by diverting the flow so that only a small portion would pass through the meter.

HEAVY SHIPMENTOF OATS AND WHEAT

The C.P.R. sidings this morning were choked with strings of cars containing Peterborough freight. The majority of them were for the Quaker Oats Co. and contained wheat and oats from Owen Sound. Two long sidings west of Park St. were filled and another siding near the station accommodated a long string. According as they can be emptied into the company's elevator they are replaced by filled cars. There seemed to be sufficient Quaker Oats cars to make up two fairly long trains.

Boils and Pimples.

Whenever your complexion is unnatural, your skin in an unhealthy condition, your face covered with blotches and pimples, when boils and festering sores abound then your blood is bad. You can best cleanse it with that purely vegetable compound, Burdock Blood Bitters, which safely and promptly renovates the blood and invigorates the entire system.

Boils Cured.

Mr. O. A. Musson, Bawlf, Alta., writes: "I recommend Burdock Blood Bitters as being the best blood purifier there is. About three years ago I was greatly troubled with boils and our druggist advised me to try Burdock Blood Bitters and after taking two bottles I have not had a boil or even a pimple."

Pimples Cured.

Mr. J. Morehouse, Zealand Station, N.B., writes: "My face and neck were covered with pimples, and I tried all kinds of remedies, but they did me no good. I went to many doctors, but they could not cure me. I then tried Burdock Blood Bitters and I must say it is a wonderful remedy for the cure of pimples."

TWO WERE DROWNED

Children Skating at Franklin's Bay Broke Through the Ice.

Special to The Examiner.

Gravenhurst, Nov. 29th.—The first drowning accident of the season occurred at Franklin's Bay, Sparrow Lake, Saturday evening, when Mary Gill aged 15 years, and her brother, Daniel Gill, aged 13, lost their lives. The two whose father Hugh Gill, highly respected, is a farmer, were skating with a number of others on the lake, when the ice gave way, letting them and two more young people, Miss Mary Jones and Cyril Gill, into the icy water. Cyril managed to get out and assist Miss Jones and also his sister on the ice, but the latter broke through again before she got to shore. The bodies were recovered.

NATURE TELLS YOU

As Many a Peterborough Reader Knows Too Well.

When the kidneys are sick,
Nature tells you all about it.
The urine is nature's calendar.
Infrequent or too frequent action;
Any urinary trouble tells of kidney ills.

Booth's Kidney Pills cure all kidney ills.

Peterborough people testify to this.

Mrs. T. DeRusia, of Mary and Bethune street, Peterborough, Ont., says, "I believe Booth's Kidney Pills a remedy of exceptional merit in quickly relieving backache caused from disordered kidneys. I frequently suffered with a dull, heavy pain in the small of my back. It would extend around my sides and into my shoulders. Headaches were frequent and often accompanied by spells of dizziness. Booth's Kidney Pills were recommended by a friend and I procured a box at McDermid & Jury's Pharmacy. I soon found them to relieve me, I have had no trouble since and can credit this only to Booth's Kidney Pills."

A REPLY TO MR. LASTAR

Peterborough, November 26.

Dear Sir,—Last Sabbath day it was my privilege to be at the meeting in the Opera House, which I enjoyed very much. After Mr. Patterson's address I noticed some confusion, and on looking around saw Mr. Lastar, who asked permission to ask a question of the chairman. Well, the crowd called "sit down" a number of times. I could not imagine why he should not be permitted to ask a question, but on inquiry find that his question was alluding to his former letter.

Now his letter on reading seems to me to put up the question of gambling as an offset from the Local Option voting in Peterborough, for which we thank Mr. Lastar, because gambling is very wrong, and there is a law on our statute book prosecuting anyone for such an offence very severely, and as Mr. Lastar is practically a stranger in our Canada, for his information we have a first class Chief of Police, and a County Constable, and I believe as efficient a police force in enforcing the law as you can find anywhere; and if Mr. Lastar has the welfare of our city at heart, and knows of any gambling going on, he should let some of our police officers know, and it will be attended to promptly; but to raise a discussion in a meeting on a Sabbath day, I think was quite out of order. This meeting was called to listen to two addresses, which I consider were very valuable to us all if we would be consistent, and try and live and make the words spoken practical.

In Mr. Lastar's letter, he talks about how important a man he has been in the Old Country. Now a few years ago, our Legislature of Ontario passed a bill giving each Municipality in Ontario the privilege of voting whether or not they should have the licensed bar room in their respected Municipality, and it has gone on for years—a great many municipalities have adopted it, and refused to repeal on new vote. And I do not think it good citizenship to be finding fault with our country's laws after so short an acquaintance with them. If Mr. Lastar is such a great adviser, I think he should communicate with King Edward the Seventh, and get on his Advisory Board, and tell them how to run the British Empire.

JUDGES ARE APPOINTED

Former Leader of Opposition In Provincial House Is Named as Chief Justice of New Tribunal—Gallihar, Martin and Irving Will Assist Him — Messrs. Gregory and Murphy Are New Judges.

Ottawa, Nov. 30.—The new Court of Appeal for British Columbia has been constituted by the appointment of Mr. J. A. Macdonald, ex-Liberal leader in British Columbia, as chief justice; Mr. W. A. Galliher, ex-M.P., and Judges Archer Martin and P. A. E. Irving, who are promoted from the Supreme Court of the province. The places of the last two on the Supreme Court Bench have been filled by the apointment of Messrs. F. B. Gregory of Victoria and Dennis Murphy of Ashcroft, a former member of the British Columbia Government, to the Supreme Court.

Chief Justice Macdonald is an old Huron County boy who was educated at Stratford and Toronto. He practiced in Toronto as a member of the firm of Cook, Wallace & Macdonald, but removed to Rossland in 1896. He was elected to the Legislature in 1903, and was soon after chosen leader of the Liberals in the House.

A Bank Robber Caught.

St. Louis, Nov. 30.—Tom Callagher, 13 years old, captured after a wagon load of policemen had surrounded the Lafayette Bank, Broadway and Park avenue, yesterday, confessed that he, with another boy, who was acting as lookout, fled when the patrol wagon appeared. Gallagher, who had ascended to the third floor of the building in the effort to get into the bank's quarters, was captured as he came down the fire escape.

"The other boy put me up to it," said the young prisoner. "We were going past the bank to-day and he pointed to a pile of money we could see through the window, and said it would be easy to get that. Then he planned how he and I were to get it.

"He made me go ahead of him, and said he would whistle if he saw anybody coming. But he never did. He just ducked."

Tattooed Human Eye.

Philadelphia, Nov. 30.—An operation never performed before in this city, and performed only a few times in the world's history, was successfully completed in a clinic at the Medico-Chirurgical College of Pharmacy by Dr. L. Webster Fox, who occupies the chair of ophthalmology.

By the use of six needles, india ink and a vegetable dye the doctor succeeded in tattooing the perfect semblance of an eye on the blind eye ball of a young girl, which was covered with an ugly white blemish.

The operation, Dr. Fox told his class, can never become a common one, as it is seldom that the eyeball of a blind person is in condition to permit tattooing work.

American Coal Stops.

North Sydney, N.S., Nov. 30.—Coal shipments up the St. Lawrence for the season have been completed, and the imports of coal from Philadelphia by the Dominion Iron & Steel Co. have also ceased. The Dominion Coal Co. is now in a position to supply all the fuel required by the big sister industry.

Since the beginning of the strike in July about 150,000 tons of American coal have been delivered at Sydney for the Steel Co.

BATTLE IS INEVITABLE

London Telegraph Now Agrees For a Weeding Out of the Members of the Lords — Lord Morley Says the Greater the Majority the Greater the Scandal — The Amendment Is Sure to Pass.

London, Nov. 30.—Lord Morley's powerful speech was the event of the budget debate yesterday in the House of Lords. The Secretary of State for India dilated on the importance of the struggle and called attention to the fact that foreign nations were watching anxiously the outcome, to see whether there would be any change to England's fiscal policy.

Lord Morley quoted Burke to the effect that the House of Lords had no right in any sense to the disposition of the public purse, and contended that if there was one thing that could not wisely be submitted to a referendum, it was the budget, with all its complexities. In addition, a referendum would weaken what was most important to maintain, namely, a sense of responsibility in the House of Commons.

As to the Lords' contention that their action would arrest the wave of socialism, he refused to believe that the artisans were predatory or socialistic, but even granting that the misery existing among some classes had produced a movement akin to socialism, it was hardly wise of the Lords to take up a position exposing them to the charge of straining the constitution as champions of the rich against the poor.

"The more triumphant the majority for Lord Lansdowne's amendment," said Lord Morley, "the higher the disparity between the numbers of the opposition, the more flagrant will be the political scandal."

Finally, said Lord Morley, they are throwing out of gear the whole financial machinery for the year. Taxes had been collected on the authority of the House of Commons by custom and not by law, and all went on regularly until an appropriation bill was passed, when the resolution became a law.

Lord Morley concluded his speech with an impressive warning that when the curtain fell upon an empty House to-day they would know that the note had been sounded for an angry, and perhaps a prolonged battle. When the Secretary resumed his seat, the small minority of Liberal peers broke into enthusiastic cheers.

Evidence of this is beginning to show itself in the Conservative press. The Daily Telegraph, which has been a firm advocate of the rejection of the budget, makes the significant admission that the morale of the brilliant debate is not that the House of Lords should not abolish or be shorn of the powers of veto, which is essential to its existence, but that it should be reconstructed, so that its more distinguished members should not be swamped in the lobbies by the peers who have never given proof of political capacity.

Although the result of the division to-day is a foregone conclusion, it cannot be doubted that the House and the country have been greatly impressed with the oratorical skill displayed in the Upper House, and especially by the powerful arguments of the Liberal peers against the course the Lords are pursuing.

Torpedo Boats for Toronto Fair.

Criminal Offence to Import Labor.

Washington, Nov. 30.—That the Government of the United States may through criminal proceedings punish persons who conspire to aid alien contract laborers to come into the United States, contrary to the immigration law, was held by the Supreme Court of the United States yesterday in the prosecution of Tilden B. Stevenson and Amede Bellaire of Boston.

ANXIOUS TO PROBE

Mr. Lennox Would Like Two Years' Accounts Put Before the Committee Instead of One and Sir Wilfrid Promises to Consider the Matter —No Attempt to Head Off the Investigation, Says Fielding.

Ottawa, Nov. 30.—There was an interesting discussion in the House of Commons yesterday afternoon as to whether the time had not arrived when the procedure adopted in the Public Accounts Committee might be changed. It has long been a grievance of the Opposition that they are prevented from probing so-called scandals by the obstructive tactics of Liberal members of the committee, and on the platform and in the Conservative press they have sought to convey the impression that the Government members burked inquiry and deliberately stifled investigation, the fact being that the Liberal members simply see to it that the Opposition investigators keep within bounds of the subject of inquiry and treat the witnesses fairly. It has been the practice to confine the work of the Public Accounts Committee to matters contained in the Auditor-General's report for the previous year, but yesterday afternoon Mr. Lennox suggested that this long-established procedure should be revised, and the Auditor-General's report for the two preceding years be referred to the committee for inquiry.

When Mr. Wharburton, the new chairman of the public accounts committee, in presenting the first report of that body, moved that the public accounts and Auditor-General's report for the last fiscal year be laid before the committee for consideration, Houghton Lennox said he proposed to discuss the question of the advisability of changing the procedure of business followed in the committee. For certain reasons, enquiries made by the committee were not as complete or satisfactory as they ought to be; that the one conspicuous excuse of failure was the determination of a number of the Government's supporters to prevent a full enquiry. Much more could be divulged than had been possible in the past, if only the proper facilities were afforded. He suggested that the public accounts for the two preceding years should be open to enquiry.

Hon. W. S. Fielding said that his impression of the proceedings of the committee differed entirely. The enquiries, he thought, were very thorough and took a wide range. It was quite the custom of the committee to take into consideration things which did not pertain at all unto the matter under enquiry. Members should remember that the readings and rules of committees were based on those of the mother Parliament, and they should not be departed from. It was undoubtedly true that there were times when it would be advisable for an enquiry to extend over a period of two years. It would be quite safe, however, to leave the decision in these cases to the committee itself.

F. D. Monk dissented. Proceedings in the public accounts committee of the Imperial Parliament were conducted in an entirely different manner. The committee consisted of 11, and, at most, only 15 members, and the chairman is always a member of the Opposition. It was entirely unheard of that one member of the committee would object to questions put by another member, and it was open for any member to ask a member any question.

F. B. Carvel challenged Mr. Lennox to point out one specific instance where he had asked a proper question and was refused the right to put it. All the papers asked for were brought before the committee, and there never had been a refusal to bring a witness to Ottawa. As a mater of fact, thousands of dollars had been squandered in bringing witnesses who were unable to give any information, and in many cases he was quite certain the Opposition members were fully aware of their inability to do so.

Mr. Blain of Peel said that the chief offender in the committee was Mr. Carvel himself. He described it as a partisan committee, and moved an amendment that the public accounts of two years, instead of one year, be open for discussion by the committee.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier indicated that the whole question was one upon which the Government would like to deliberate and suggested that Mr. Blain should withdraw his amendment.

Hon. Geo. E. Foster suggested that the committee be reduced to 15 and the members of it more carefully chosen. Blain's amendment was then withdrawn.

Woman Was Set on Fire.

Tampa, Fla., Nov. 30—Marie Acosta, a young widow who was fatally burned in her home at West Tampa Sunday night; declared in an ante-mortem statement yesterday that a rejected suitor, Miguel Comez, had set her afire.

She said that he, with two confederates, forcibly entered her home on Sunday night, bound her hand and foot, and saturated her clothing with gasoline and touched a lighted match to her.

Daughter Ran Away.

Woodstock, Nov. 30.—J. Everett of Currie's Cross, was in the city yesterday looking for his sixteen-year-old daughter, who disappeared from home last week. Everett, who is a farmer, attributes his daughter's disappearance to the influence of a hired man whom he had working for him a year ago.

Sailors In Union.

New York, Nov. 30.—Coolie crews on Pacific mail steamships controlled by the Harriman system and on steamers running from Puget Sound to China, controlled by James J. Hill, will be denounced at the fourteenth annual convention of the International Seamen's Union of America, which opened in New York yesterday.

It is said plans will be discussed to weld the marine workers of the world into a gigantic union. J. Havelock Wilson, leader of the British seamen and member of the English Parliament, presided.

With the perfecting of the international union the seamen contemplate the formation of a series of demands which will be presented to the employers, including: Uniform wage scales for long and short voyages; the number of engine room, and boiler room employes carried on each ship to be regulated according to the coal tonnage of the ship; the selection of every crew to be under the supervision of a representative of the sailors' union.

First Lectures In Canada.

Washington, Nov. 30.—Announcement was made yesterday by Secretary Mitchell Carroll of the Archaeological Institute of America that David G. Hogarth, M.A., curator of the Ashmolean Museum, University of Oxford, will be the first foreign lecturer under the Charles Eliot Norton Memorial Foundation, recently endowed by Jas. Loeb of New York.

Mr. Hogarth begins his lecture tour under the society's engagement at Halifax, N.S., to-night and will address a half dozen societies of the institute in Canada before coming to the United States.

THANKS IN ALL THINGS

PASTOR RUSSELL PREACHES A THANKSGIVING SERMON.

Text: "In Everything Give Thanks, For This Is the Will of God Concerning You In Christ Jesus (I. Thessalonians v, 18)—God Purposed That Blessing of World Should Be Accomplished by the Saviour.

Sunady, Nov. 28.—Pastor Russell of Brooklyn Tabernacle preached to-day from the following text: "In everything give thanks, for this is the will of God concerning you in Christ Jesus" (I. Thessalonians v, 18). He said:

There is a beauty and consistency in the Bible which many overlook, to their own confusion. Failing to "rightly divide the Word of Truth" (II. Timothy ii, 15), failing to discriminate between the consecrated believers and the nominal believers of the world, which the Bible everywhere recognises, has led to this confusion. To the logically-minded thus confused, the Bible is an unreasonable Book, inconsistent with facts.

These matters are well illustrated in our text, which was addressed, not to all mankind, nor to merely nominal Christians—but to Christians, "in God the Father, and in the Lord Jesus Christ," as the introduction shows. This word in means something more than is generally appreciated. Note the Saviour's words, "If a man love me he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him and make our abode with him." "I am in my Father, and ye in me and I in you" (John xiv, 20, 23). The whole testimony of the Scriptures is that those who attain to this glorious oneness with the Father and with the Son are in all but a "little flock" and amongst them are "not many great, not many wise, not many learned." It is to this class alone that the Scriptures are addressed—though to some extent including a justified class supposedly approaching this sanctified condition. These may well be informed by the Apostle that they should "in everything give thanks," when in full harmony with the Divine will.

But note the confusion of attempting to apply these words to the world in general. What has the world to be thankful for — from its own standpoint? It knows not what God's future purposes are, which, therefore, cannot enter into its consideration. And without that knowledge of coming blessings life is often so little appreciated that self-destruction is preferred. Undoubtedly the number of suicides would be far greater than it is, were it not for a certain fear or dread that the future might be more terrible than the present.

The average man, heathen and civilized, knows that his coming into the world was without his consent. He eats and drinks and sleeps and labors; because these are necessities. He has headaches and heartaches, and every other kind. Altogether his experience is "of few years and full of trouble." His chief pleasure is in hoping for and striving to attain pleasure. And when the "cup" of supposed happiness is in his hand, the gall of bitterness is found mingled with it, and its dregs are sorrows. Can such a man be thankful? especially if he has been taught the doctrine of the "dark ages" respecting the future—that when he shall die he will either be ushered into a Purgatory of centuries or torture indescribable, or, worse still, that his lot will be to suffer endlessly—unless he should be one of the saints, which he well knows he is not, and which we all know, as the Bible declares, are but "few." Surely to call upon such people for thankfulness to God would be an absurdity. And it is to the credit of the Scriptures that they are not thus absurd, and that our text is addressed, not to those who constitute the masses, but to the "little flock"—the saints.

Before proceeding to apply our text to the class to which it is addressed (the saints), we pause to consider the hope of the world in general, as set forth in the Scriptures. The knowledge of this hope is not granted to the world, but to the saints—that they might know, might appreciate, the gracious purposes of God toward mankind in general; and that they might understand also the Divine intention respecting their co-operation with God in the blessings he purposes to bring eventually to all the families of the earth.

The explanation of the sorrows of the world is given in the Bible; which tells us that sin lies at the door and that the mental, moral and physical blemishes which cause humanity such distress are incidental to the penalty pronounced against sin; namely death. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." Because Father Adam when on trial representatively for his race sinned and came under sin's penalty, "Dying thou shalt die," therefore all his children sharing in his imperfections are likewise imperfect—sinners, as St. Paul explains (Roamns v, 12). Thus, during sixty centuries, approximately twenty thousand millions of Adam's children have been "born in sin and shapen in iniquity," and have come into the world condemned and dying, mentally, morally and physically.

Divine sympathy exercised toward this race of sinners provided a Saviour "who for the joy that was set before him" sacrificed his life—for the world (John iii, 16). "Jesus Christ by the grace of God tasted death for every man." Then instead of dealing with the world, instead of saving the world, instead of setting up the promised Kingdom to bless the world the Saviour did something else. And this which he has been doing from the time of his death until now the Apostle explains to us is "a mystery" (I. Corinthians xv, 51; Ephesians i, 9; Romans xi, 25). "The mystery of God" the world does not understand because God prefers to keep the matter a mystery from them. But "the secret of the Lord is with them that fear him and he will shew them his Covenant" (Psalm xxv, 14).

"The mystery" is, that God purposed that the blessing of the world should be accomplished by our Saviour alone, but in association with a the world and specially taught and ... this age. Not only is this feature of the Divine Plan Scripturally called "the mystery of God," which will be finished by the close of this age, but additionally the Church herself is Scripturally termed "the mystery of God"—the Mystic Body of Christ. "For God gave Christ to be the Head over the Church, which is his Body." "Ye are members in particular of the Body of Christ," which is the Church (Ephesians i, 22, 23; I. Corinthians xii, 27).

During these long centuries required for the finding of this saintly class for whom the Lord has been searching with the magnet of Truth, various false theories have sprung up and found acceptance in the world. One of these is that God does not love the world and has never purposed its salvation; but that, on the contrary, he fore-ordained and predestinated that all except the "elect saints" should suffer eternal torture, because he wished to have it so. Another wrong theory which gained acceptance was that whilst God wishes to save the world, he finds himself unable to do so, because handicapped by human self-will and by the aggressiveness of Satan, who has blinded and deceived the vast majority and has them completely in his power through ignorance and superstition. This theory tells us that God loves the world, including the heathen millions, and that he longs to have the Gospel taken to them, but cannot do so, except through human agency, and is disappointed and baffled, because those who profess to be his people fail to raise sufficient missionary donations.

To rational minds these theories which satisfied in the past are no longer satisfactory; hence many are turned to infidelity. As the Scriptures say, "My people perish for lack of knowledge" (Hosea iv, 6).

Leaving these unsatisfactory errors of the "dark ages" and going back to the Scriptures we find their teachings consistent; namely, that as soon as the "mystery," the Church, is completed, the blessing of God will proceed through The Christ (Head and members) to the world. As it is written, "In thy Seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed." The mystery, be it known, is that the spiritual "Seed of Abraham" is not the Lord Jesus only, but includes also his members—the Church. As we read, "If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's Seed, and heirs according to the promise" (Galatians iii, 29).

According to the Scriptures the blessing of God will proceed through Spiritual Israel, a "Royal Priesthood," "after the order of Melchizedec," to natural Israel under the terms of their New Covenant (Jeremiah xxxi, 31). During the Millennial Age under the spiritual Kingdom of The Christ (operating through the earthly Kingdom of Israel) all nations will be instructed, enlightened, blessed. Not only so, but the merit of Christ will then be applied also on behalf of the thousands of millions who have gone down into the prison-house of death — sheol, hades — the grave. The Church will constitute the "First Resurrection," "His resurrection." All sharing in it will attain life on the spirit plane like unto the angels, but superior, "far above angels." Later during the Millennium the world will return from the tomb, "every man in his own order" (I. Corinthians xv, 23). And the resurrecting process will continue with them, to the intent that the willing and obedient may continue to rise gradually towards perfection and finally attain it; while at the same time the earth will be rejuvenated and become the promised "Paradise regained"—restored (Acts iii, 19-21).

Looking down into the future prophetically the Psalmist exclaims, in view of the Kingdom blessings promised to the world, "O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good! for his mercy endureth forever!" It is the mercy of God toward us and toward all who need his mercy and who desire it that is the ground for thanksgiving. True, praise must come from thankful hearts, and in order to be properly thankful, one must see more than is now visible to those who have not the eye of faith and the ear of faith and the Divine revelation respecting things to come. But it is these very opportunities that the Lord's consecrated ones possess: "Blessed are your eyes, for they see and your ears, for they hear." Not only so, but to the extent that anyone's eyes see and his ears hear of the grace of God he has responsibility. To possess the knowledge of God and to disdain it is to receive the grace of God in vain, whether more or less (II. Corinthians vi, 1).

God's people not only give thanks for the blessings of the future which they receive by faith, but additionally they appreciate blessings granted to them in advance in the present life and give thanks for these. The first of these is the knowledge, the appreciation, of the goodness of God in granting us a release from sin and its penalty by faith, so that we can (without waiting for actualities) now rejoice in the mercy which has justified us freely by Divine grace through faith in the blood of Christ. The realization of the rolling away of our load of sin, a realization of our forgiveness by the Father, calls for gratitude, for thanksgiving, and this cause continuing, our thanks continue. We were lifted from the horrible pit and the miry clay of sin and condemnation and our feet were placed upon the Rock Christ Jesus. It was in consequence of this that a new song was put into our mouth, even the loving-kindness of our God. And this is the first cause for our thankfulness. All other blessings rest upon this blessing and all other thanksgivings should properly, therefore, include thanks for this blessing.

Additionally after being justified we were inducted into a still further grace or privilege, namely, the privilege of becoming members of the Body of Christ, members of the "mystery" class. The invitation to this class the Apostle expresses thus, "I beseech you, brethren, by the mercies of God (your justification) that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service" (Romans xii, 1). Through this grace or privilege, if accepted, we gain the opportunity of a change of nature—from human to Divine. Our human nature justified, cleansed, made acceptable to God as a sacrifice through the merit of Christ, if sacrificed by us faithfully, will be replaced by a spirit nature and glory, honor, immortality, joint-heirship, with our Lord and Head. What cause we have in this for thanksgiving! What shall we render unto the Lord our God for all his benefits towards us? "We will take the cup of salvation (his cup, the cup of self-sacrifice) and call upon the name of the Lord (for assistance to drink of the Master's cup). We will pay our vows of consecration unto the Lord—publicly before all his people" (Psalm cxvi, 12-14).

"Every joy he sends me Comes a sweet and glad surprise."

The very fact that we do not know everything; the fact that we are ever learning as pupils in the School of Christ, so far from being a cause of disappointment, is a source of pleasure. The heart that has come into faith-union and communion with the Lord learns something more daily respecting the Heavenly Father's love and care, and each fresh item of knowledge is a new well-spring of pleasure." "He satisfieth the longing soul." "Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled." "Goodness and mercy follow me all the days of my life." These are the experiences of those ripe Christians called upon by the Apostle to give thanks unto God in every matter and to know that this is God's will in respect to all those who are members of Christ — "in Christ Jesus" (Psalm cvii, 9; Matthew v, 6; Psalm xxiii, 6).

Let us not overlook the fact that our text indicates that we are to give thanks for our sorrows, our trials, our disappointments, as well as for our joys and pleasures, for everything includes all things. Nor is this the only Scripture to this effect. Hearken to the Apostle's words which urge the members of Christ to rejoice in tribulation, not because tribulation is a joy producer, but, as he explains, tribulation works out additional patience and patience brings additional experience and larger experience brings larger hope, until we are not ashamed of our tribulations, because of increased love of God shed abroad in our hearts thereby (Romans v, 3; viii, 35).

The basis of all these blessings and rejoicings both as respects the future and the present experiences is faith. First, in the fact that there is a God. Second, in the fact that he has a noble character. Third, in the fact that his Wisdom, Justice, Love and Power are perfect and thoroughly co-ordinated. Fourth, in the fact that all of those powers are enlisted in the salvation of the world. Fifth, in the fact that that salvation began to be worked out by our Lord at his First Advent. Sixth, in the fact that it is still working out in the selection of his Church. Seventh, in the fact that shortly it will begin to take practical shape in the establishment of Christ's Millennial Kingdom. Eighth, in the fact that through that Kingdom a blessing shall extend to every creature of our race.

So, then, let every man to the extent of his enlightenment appreciate and confess the Almighty God and give thanks unto his name, because he is good and because his mercy endureth forever. And let those who have tasted of his grace pursue on, that they may grow in grace, grow in knowledge, grow in faith and grow in character-likness to our God. And let his saints addressed in this text more and more appreciate their wonderful privilege, their high calling of God in Christ Jesus—to be heirs of God and joint-heirs with Jesus Christ our Lord—if so be that they suffer with him, that they may be also glorified together. And knowing that they have need of faith and patience and character development, let these firmly trust the Great Teacher, come what may, and give thanks for every experience of life, knowing that our Father is too wise to err and remembering the Master's words, "The Father himself loveth you" (John xvi, 27).

A Foreboding Fulfilled

(Scene—A sleeping car approaching Chicago from the south on an April morning. A tired-looking men and a thin woman, with a wrinkle between her eyes, are seated in section 10. The only other occupant of the car, a dark man with an air of reserve, is surrounded by suitcase, bags and bundles, in section 3.)

Woman—Henry, don't you think there's something mysterious about that man at the other end of the car?

Henry—No, I hadn't noticed it.

Woman—Well, there is! It gives me the queerest feeling to look at him—just as though something dreadful was going to happen.

Henry—You're always thinking something dreadful is going to happen.

Woman—And it always does happen!

Henry— Nonsense!

Henry—Didn't I have a premonition of burglars for years before they broke into our flat and stole your watch? And that Mrs. Flack, who enticed our Minnie away by advertising for a maid at $5 a week when I was only paying $4.50—hadn't I often told you I felt certain that woman would bring ill-fortune into my life? I can't explain these impressions, but I've learned to trust them. Now we've been traveling with that man for 24 hours and he hasn't ever asked us where we were going!

Henry—Why should he?

Woman—Why shouldn't he? And yesterday, when I asked him if he lived in Chicago he just said "No," and never offered to tell me where he did live. These unsociable people are always at the bottom of some kind of trouble! There's something about him—I can't tell just what—but I'm certain he will bear watching.

(She proceeds to justify her belief by gazing intently at the man in section 3, while the wrinkle between her eyes deepens. A sudden lurch of the car causes the baggage which he has piled on the opposite seat to slide to the floor. He jumps up, piles the bags back on the seat and, hastily replacing the lid which has fallen from a box, glances around furtively.)

"Have You Lost Something?"

Woman—See how strangely he is acting!

Woman — Have you lost something?

Dark Man—Don't trouble yourself. I beg of you. The porter will, no doubt, find it.

Woman (aside to her husband)—Entirely too mysterious! I'm sure there's trouble ahead. (To the dark man.) If you would tell us what you've lost we might—

Woman (jumping upon the seat)—An alligator? Henry, didn't I tell you I was suspicious of that man the minute I laid eyes on him? Get up on the seat this minute! Do you want to be swallowed alive?

Henry (protestingly)—There's no danger.

Woman—Danger! What do you call danger? I was reading an article about alligators just the other day; it said they were 16 feet long!

Henry—But this one can't—

Woman—How do you know? Do get up here! And, Henry, if it attacks you, be sure not to let it turn on its side; they are much more dangerous when they are on their sides, because then they can use their claws! Oh, Henry, I knew something would happen!

Porter—I'll get the broom, sah!

Woman—Oh, Henry, if I get back to Chicago alive I'll stay there!

Henry (with fervor)—I'll see that you do!

(The porter goes to a small closet and opens the door, which has been slightly ajar. He stoops quickly and comes forward, grinning, with the alligator—about six inches long—wriggling between his thumb and finger. Curtain.)—Chicago Daily News.

THE MAID AT SWEET SIXTEEN

Winning, pensive, and sweet with delicate grace and charm in every movement, but that lovely color that once shone so rosily has gradually faded away. Her eyes are expressive but listless, that lightness of step and buoyancy of spirit which once were hers are gone.

This girl is in danger. Her system demands nourishment; her blood must be renewed. She needs Ferrozone—needs it badly—because it will bring back the nerve energy which rapid growth and study have exhausted. New strength and old-time vigor return with Ferrozone. The delicate maid is energized and given the endurance and vigor that means health.

SHE NEEDS FERROZONE

Parents, think it over. In Ferrozone there is wonderful power for strengthening and rebuilding. Every child needs it—every boy and girl will improve on it. Get a few boxes. 50c each, or six boxes for $2.50. Sold by all dealers.

Listless, Backward Children

Made Bright and Active by Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills

No Needs Nice Care —Not Soaking.

Many a growing boy or girl is set down as constitutionally slow, stupid or lazy when it is really a question of inactive bowels, lazy liver or sluggish kidneys.

The growing child, with a hearty appetite, certainly cannot long remain healthy and bright if the sewers of the body, the bowels and the kidneys, are choked up with impurities that should be thrown off promptly.

The muddy complexion, dragging limbs and dislike for mental or physical effort show plainly that the child needs Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills to stir up the liver and kidneys and regulate the bowels. Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills do this most effectively, cleansing the whole system, purifying the blood, aiding the digestion and giving plenty of life and activity. As upon the education obtained may depend the success in life of your boy or girl—see to it that the general health of the child is such that study is pleasure and not a hardship.

The Misadventures of Parrish

By H. Gould Chapin

(Copyright, by J. B. Lippincott Co.)

As Parrish, our corpulent and absent-minded bookkeeper, told it next morning the story was not altogether devoid of humor.

"You all know," he began, "how I had to stay late fixing up a trial balance. It must have been fully 12 o'clock before I left the office. You also remember what kind of weather it was—sleet, snow, and all that. I was pretty well fagged out, and it did seem as though those everlasting columns of figures would never quit dancing up and down in my head. All the way over to my flat they kept it up, and, what with the cold and the figures, I knew it was no use trying to get any sleep just then. Now, the best thing in the world when you feel that way is a bath—hot or cold according to whether it's winter or summer—and I sneaked upstairs quiet, thinking how nice and restful one would feel. Mrs. Parrish is a light sleeper, so I slipped into the bathroom, turned on the water, undressed, and it didn't take me very long to drop in. Great Scott, didn't it feel fine! I just lay back still and quiet and almost dozed off right there and then.

"'Come, come,' I said to myself, 'this will never do,' and I started to get up—only started, mind you, for then the awful part of the evening began. Not an inch could I move—stuck fast. I tried and tried to slew my shoulders around or to get some sort of a purchase on the edge of the tub, but the sides were high and it was no go. Then I tried to push up with my elbows. You know how impossible it is to get a mustard plaster off your own back. Well, it was just like that. I did get a little place loose, but it felt as though the skin had come off with it.

"You can bet I was scared, but this was nothing to what happened afterwards.

"I told you I'd been thinking of figures and wondering how that things hadn't straightened themselves out, and—well, I can't explain it, but, somehow, in looking around the bathroom for something to help pry myself loose with, the place struck me as considerably changed. Our medicine closet hadn't any mirror; Mrs. Parrish never hung the towels on a rack like that—why, those weren't our towels; that was a "C" marked on them. Good Heaven! I got all hot and cold at once. It wasn't our bathroom. Then it came over me like a flash. Our flat was on the fourth floor. We'd only lived there a week, and our previous flat, where we'd been five years, was on the third. In my awful absentmindedness I'd probably gone up two flights and, without thinking, walked right in. The keys just happened to fit. Same as it was in 'Called Back,' you remember.

"Now, if I was in a fix before, you can imagine what it was now. I simply had to get out. The new enamel seemed to get harder and harder all the time. They had put it on the day before, so I round out later, and while it was all right when I stepped in, the hot water had softened it.

"I must have lost my head here, for it struck me as a good scheme to pull out the plug with my toes. Of course, you can imagine the result. When all the hot water ran out the stuff got harder than ever—solidified, so to speak. Besides, it was cold—the janitor always let his fires get low at night—so I lay there and shivered, feeling more and more like a corpse in cold storage every minute.

"I suppose I must have made some noise, for the next thing on the program was when I heard a window open with a bang and some woman letting off a volley of yells. I tried to shout some sort of an explanation, but she wouldn't even come to the door to hear my story, and kept on howling 'Thieves!' 'Murder!' and every other thing that came into her silly head. I never did think much of that woman, anyway. She's the nervous, erratic kind, and I guess it's just as well her husband's on the road most of the time. If she was my wife I'd take to drink. Anyhow, they tell me she raised the entire block.

"'Where is he?' in a man's voice was what I heard next. 'Here, you come out of there.'

"Then, 'Aw, yes, yer can tell all that to the sergeant,' when I tried to explain. 'Are you comin' out of there or aren't yer, now?'

"Well, there isn't much more to tell. He broke down the door, of course. Mrs. Clay let out another yelp when she saw my doubled-up figure in the tub, and McGrath just gave one pull and had me clear. He then helped me to dress. Why, I can't lean back in my chair now.

"It goes without saying that Mrs. Clay refused to believe my story (she managed to recognize me in time so I wasn't carried off to the station-house) and said she knew I was drunk—and on top of all that, didn't I meet Mrs. Parrish face to face on the landing. She'd heard the noise and come down to investigate.

"No, I'm not going into details of what was said then. Sometimes when the truth is too preposterous, you can tell some sort of a plausible fiction, but here I couldn't even do that. It was around four a. m. when Mrs. Parrish agreed to consider the matter closed, and I guess I'm safe, as she didn't say a word when the reporters began dropping in about breakfast time."

No, Dog!

Reared in the strict school of "Yes, sir!" and "No, ma'am!" addressed without thought of servility to all elders and betters, I find this a season of rare courtesy and scant civility.

Well do I remember that awesome scene at my father's table when a stout and rebellious little sister, seething with disappointment over some denied dainty, answered "No!" to a well meant proffer of a less desirable dish.

"No, dog? or No, cat?" my father inquired with ominous calm. "No, dog!" the sturdy lass recklessly replied.

I quake even now at the thought of the breathless pause which followed, and draw a veil over the painful aftermath.—Appleton's.

Cure for Headache.

One of the very best remedies for a sick or nervous headache was suggested to me recently by a Finnish servant girl. She took raw potatoes without either washing or paring and cut them into thick slices. These were laid close together on the forehead and temples and kept in place by covering with a large handkerchief folded cornerwise and tied in the back.

In a short time the pain disappeared. As the pieces of potato got hot replace with cold fresh ones.

They give all the coolness of ice without the incidental dampness, and there is not the burning sensation ice often causes.

Unsympathetic.

Mrs. Malaprop—Young Sharp will have to apologize before I'll speak to him again.

Miss Interest—Did he insult you?

Mrs. Malaprop—Did he? The last time I met him I told him that my uncle, Lord de Style, had locomotive stacksis, and he had the impudence to ask if he "whistled at crossings." He's an unsympathetic brute.

Had Heart Trouble.

Nerves Were All Unstrung.

Wherever there is any weakness of the heart or nerves, flagging energy or physical breakdown, the use of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills will soon produce a healthy, strong system.

Can Do Her Own Work Now.

Mrs. M. McGann, Debec Junction, N.B., writes:—"I wish to tell you what Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills have done for me. Three years ago I was so run down I could not do my own work. I went to a doctor, and he told me I had heart trouble and that my nerves were all unstrung. I took his medicine, as he ordered me to do, but it did me no good. I then started to take Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, and had only taken one box before I started to feel better; so I continued their use until I had taken several boxes, and I am now strong and well, and able to do my own work. When I commenced taking your pills I weighed 125 pounds, and now weigh 135 and have given birth to a lovely young daughter, which was a happy thing in the family. When I commenced taking Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, I could not go upstairs without resting before I got to the top. I can now go up without any trouble."

MUSIC AND DRAMA.

BIG MUSICAL PRODUCTION.

Announcement is made by the Shuberts that next May, after the conclusion of the regular theatrical season, one great star production will be taken on a special train straight through to the coast. Every one of the Shubert musical company leaders will be in the cast, including Lew Fields, Sam Bernard, Frank Daniels, Eddie Foy, James T. Powers, Andrew Mack, William Norris, Lulu Glaser, Louise Gunning, Blanche Ring and Marguerite Clark.

These will be cast for the stellar roles, but others, scarcely less distinguished will appear as follows: Flora Parker, Harriet Standon, Hattie Lorraine, Elsa Ryan, Edith Decker, Clara Palmer, Winnie O'Conner, Gertrude Darrell and others. The musical piece has not yet been decided on. Only the larger cities will be played en route to the coast.

COMING SHUBERT OPENINGS.

Early Shuber openings will be: The Watcher, by Cora Maynard; The Head of the Firm. from the Danish The King of Cadonia, an English musical play; The City, Andrew Mack in a musical play, Marie Dressler in Tilly's Nightmare, and a new farce from the German.

Over-jubilant students of the state university of Iowa, celebrating a great football victory, stormed the Coldren Theatre at Iowa City, Ia., the night after the game, and tried to force their way into the theatre to witness Jesse James, without the formality of buying tickets. When the doors were closed in their faces, they accured ancient eggs, potatoes, brickbats, etc., and smashed the plate glass and other windows, in the opera house. The police were called, but the "rah-rah" boys defied them, and one of the policemen was struck in the head with a beer bottle. Tneh the fire department was called to the scene, and, after the collegians vainly tried to cut the hose, the students were drowned out, and fled. Two of the attacking party were later arrested and fined $100 and $25, respectively, and warrants for several other students are in the hands of the police now.

"Having four different surnames in her brief time, and all those the names of birds, is the singular distinction held by Mrs. Elizabeth Martin, of Paris, Ky., who is now visiting her sister, Mrs. Eugene Hartsock, near Lebanon.

"She began as Elizabeth Bird, in Harrison County, Ky., and first ventured from the home nest when she married Bud Martin. When Mr. Martin died she married Edward Crow, a farmer. When the time came to change nests she allied herself with William Robin, and lived happily until the matrimonial season of Mrs. Robin again rolled along. Then David Buzzard, a widower, more attractive personally than his name would indicate, appeared, and Mrs. Robin became Mrs. Buzzard.

"Into the Buzzard roost, Mrs. Buzzard carried one little Martin, two little Crows and one little Robin. One little Buzzard was already there to welcome the other birds."

Dorothy Russell has lost her heart to a gay young prince of the land of chysanthemums. The fair young daughter of Lillian Russell declares that she is engaged to Prince Mutsuhito who, according to daughter Dorothy, is a "Prince of Japan and the nephew of the Mikado. She said that they will be married shortly in Pasadena, Cal., where she is going to await his return from Japan.

She first met Mutsuhito when he was a student at Yale. They met frequently in New York, and finally he secured her consent to marry him this fall.

"Then the Prince was compelled to return to Japan," she said, "because the Mikado objected to him marrying an American girl. He went there to secure consent, but whether he gets it or not we will be married soon."

Just as she had finished singing and was tripping off the stage of a Springfield (O.) theatre, Miss Bertha Allgower, of Columbus, O., was attacked by a lion which she was putting through a number of tricks. The animal leaped upon her and bore her down. One of its huge paws struck her leg, the claws cutting three deep gashes, about four inches long and nearly an inch dep. With tail switching, and roaring with rage, the beast stood over the woman's helpless form. Alfred Camm, one of the actors, seized a prodding iron and drove the lion into his cage.

Removes Poisons of Catarrh and Rheumatism from the Blood

For catarrh of the head use a teaspoonful of salt and a quarter teaspoonful of borax dissolved in a pint of warm water. Snuff this mixture through the nostrils twice daily and immediate relief is experienced. To cure, a constitutional blood remedy must be used. Catarrh and rheumatism are both due to accumulated poisons in the system. These poisons must be eliminated.

The following simple home mixture effectively acts on the kidneys, the bowels and the skin, causing them to resume their functions quickly and properly.

Get one-half ounce fluid extract Buchu, and two ounces syrup Sarsaparilla compound. Mix and take a teaspoonful after each meal and one at retiring. Many cases of catarrh, rheumatism, and kidney trouble have already benefited by this treatment.

Began With Three Dollars And Is Now A Wealthy Farmer

Possibilities of the West Exemplified by the Success of a Foreigner Who, Handicapped in Almost Every Respect, Reached Prosperity in a Few Years.

CAN RETIRE ANY TIME NOW

Winnipeg, Nov. 30.—E. A. Guillemin, said to be the largest individual farmer in Saskatchewan, is spending a few days in the city on a business trip. Mr. Guillemin's home is at Forget, Sask., and the story of his success in that province is probably without a parallel even in the province, where there have been extraordinary instances of progress and advancement on the part of those engaged in agriculture.

Mr. Guillemin, when he arrived in Canada just eighteen years ago, in 1891, was at a double disadvantage. He was in a foreign country, the language of which he did not speak, and he was entirely without capital. His former home was in France, and when he reached Forget, Sask., and wished to file on a homestead, he was unable to do so for the lack of the sum of $10, which the Government requires. The amount in his possession was $2.10. Eventually he succeeded in borrowing the $10 and secured his homestead.

Since 1891 he has been known in Forget as one of the hardest working agriculturists of the community. Early in his career in his new home he began buying land, chiefly from the Canadian Pacific Railway. Land in the vicinity was then held at $3 per acre, and at this price he succeeded in acquiring the title to fifteen quarter sections, or 2,400 acres. The value of the land continued to rise and he continued to buy, as he was able, until he had secured fifty quarter sections, the price paid running from $8 to $15 per acre. This year he sold seven quarters at $25 per acre, which is now the ruling price in the district.

Threshed Fifty Thousand Bushels.

This year he was engaged in threshing on his place for 54½ days. He threshed out 50,000 bushels of wheat, of which he sold 34,000 bushels, one train load, at a price varying from 84 to 87 cents per bushel. He has on hand still 16,000 bushels. In addition to wheat he raised 30,000 bushels of oats, 7,000 bushels of barley and 500 bushels of flax. He owns 104 horses and a number of cattle, but since the construction of the railway he has been engaged chiefly in raising wheat. This year he bought his first threshing machine, paying for it the sum of $2,100. He estimates that the machine earned for him this fall $3,000, thus paying for itself in one season and leaving $900 to the good. The weather was very propitious for farm threshing, not a single day being lost in the two months which were spent in this work. The wheat averaged 23 bushels to the acre and graded No. 1 and No. 2 Northern. In the past nine years seven good crops have been harvested on this farm. For six successive years the returns were excellent, that is in the years 1901, 1902, 1903, 1904, 1905 and 1906. In the two following years there was a partial failure. As the years have passed the quality of the buildings on the farm have been steadily improved and are now as good as can be found in the district. About $10,000 has been invested in this way by Mr. Guillemin. The farm consists of 6,880 acres, of which about 6,000 acres were under crop this season.

The regular meeting of the Central Charity Board was held last night, with Mayor Rush presiding, Messrs. McClelland, Aldridge, Yelland, Cochrane, Kemp, Ratten, Miller, Braund, and Rev. Father McColl. Considerable business was done. The payment of $540 for 101 cords of hardwood was confirmed. A statement was submitted by Mr. P. Campbell, showing a balance of $427.10 in the bank. An offer from Mr. J. E. A. Fitzgerald to supply 100 cords of hardwood at $5.25 a cord was received, and the chairman was authorized to arrange for its acceptance. Relief Officer F. W. The "Sovereign" Hot Water Boiler

TAYLOR-FORBES Company, Limited, GUELPH, ONT.

Generations of Canadians have shivered through comfortless winters awaiting the arrival of an efficient house heating system. Now that it is here in the "Sovereign" hot water furnace, many still cling to the hot air furnace under the mistaken idea that an equipment of pipes and radiators is too expensive. Ask your plumber for an estimate—and remember that what you buy will never wear out—will add more than its entire cost to the value of your house—will give you comfort and protect your health.

As well as heating all the house, the "Sovereign" will supply abundance of hot water for the bath and kitchen.

Splendid Lecture By Miss Udy On Systematic Giving

The following paper was read by Miss Udy at the W. M. S. meeting in Lakefield:

In considering the question of Systematic Giving one writer has said "So general is the awakening upon the subject as scarcely to have escaped the casual observer." To use a common expression "It is in the air." Believers are honestly asking "What are the principles of Christian Stewardship, and what is the revealed plan for proportionate benevolence?"

In the first place systematic giving is an old plan. The ancient Jew gave under the Mosaic Law, first his tithe or income tax; then his vow or free-will offering; and the annual feast collections. Nor were these all for special provision was also made for the poor, so that all included, the annual tax of the Jew has been estimated to have averaged one-third—and some say one-half—of his entire income. Thus we see no careless, slip-shod way of giving, but a systematic plan. I fear many to-day would consider such a tax upon a man's income as ruinous, but it was not so in the case of the Israelites, for coupled with the Divine command we find that there were affixed expressly revealed temporal rewards for obedience, and temporal penalties for disobedience. God's promise was as follows: "If the rebe among you a poor man of one of thy brethren within any of thy gates in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, thou shalt not harden thy heart nor shut thine hand from thy poor brother. Thou shalt surely give him and thine heart shall not be grieved when thou givest unto him, because that for this thing the Lord thy God shall bless thee in all thy works and in all that thou puttest thine hand unto (Deut. 4-7 to 10).

Need I say that this promise was ratified always and absolutely?

Then, again, we have the familiar passage found in Malachi 3, 10 and 11: "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse that there may be meat in mine house and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord ofHosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven and pour out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. And I will rebuke the devourer (does that mean floods, frosts, etc.?) for your sakes and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruits before the time in the field, saith the Lord of Hosts". I wonder if there are any here to-day who are saying in their hearts, "I am glad I did not live in the days when God commanded such tremendous gifts. I am glad I was born in the Gospel dispensation." This brings us to consider the question, whether the command is as binding upon us to-day as it was upon the ancient Israelite. Abraham and Jacob gave the tithe before there was any Mosaic law, therefore the tithe was not born at the time of the Mosaic law, and I cannot find any passage to prove that it was annulled when the Mosaic dispensation was merged into the Gospel. Have we not as much authority for believing in Tithing as for believing in the Sabbath? Both were instituted before the giving of the Law, and we have no knowledge that Jesus Christ ever annulled the one or the other. We know that He observed the Sabbath and we also know that He declared "Ye tithe mint and rue, and all manner of herbs and pass over judgments and the love of God; these ought ye to have done and not to leave the other undone."

Besides this there is positive New Testament authority for a plan of Systematic Giving in Paul's charges to the churches, "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come." There is a time for setting aside our savings and a definite basis for calculating what those givings should be. Thus, we see that the poor as well as the rich were to give as God had prospered them. What an impetus would be given to the work of the Lord if all the members of the church would give something. If the church to-day had a corresponding scheme of proportionate giving, how all her languishing enterprises would be quickened, and liberally sustained.

Systematic Giving is a wise and needful plan. Why should we buy our clothes upon business principles and keep our butcher's and grocer's bills straight to a cent, but give to the Lord on impulse waiting for some stirring address to open our pocket-books? We say we do try to give proportionately, we think we give all we can. Why not be as sure that our accounts with God are straight as we are that our grocer's bill is paid. We pay the latter and feel that the matter is settled and yet we hesitate to so deal with God, and it may be that across our lives God has already written "There is that withholdeth more than is meet but it tendeth to poverty." (Prov .11-24.) Who knows but some of us are searching in vain for the source of our spiritual leanness when the true cause is hidden away in our pocket-books. Failure to obey God's commands brought a curse in the old days—it brings no less a penalty to-day. We give at the rate of one cent a year for each heathen soul and yet while you and I are sitting in this church, every breath we draw, four souls perish who have never heard of Christ. Once we prayed for open doors into heathen lands and God answered, and then we prayed for opened hearts and to-day thousands are waiting to go to the foreign fields. Why are they not going? Because we have been so slow in learning to pray: "Lord open our pockets." Let each of us ask ourselves "Are we as Christian women laying aside for God a proportion large enough for us to feel the giving of it to be a real sacrifice? Are we faithfully handling what God has entrusted to our care?"

Systematic Giving is a possible plan. God asks no impossibilities from his children. It is possible for us to come up to the required standard. The Moravian Church sends five missionaries for every seventy members. America twenty-one for every one hundred thousand members. How do the Moravians do it? May I venture to suggest that they have gotten away beyond the principle of tithing, the we oftentimes declare too hard a thing? Now to those who have already started to give systematically, let me say that last year's standard ought not perhaps to be the standard of this year. Are we grasping after fresh light, are we getting nearer the place where we can say: "Of thine own have we given Thee". And now to those who have not already done so, will you not resolve to become a proportionate giver? No matter what your income, nor from what source it comes. We all receive something. Set aside one-tenth of it. Promise the King one-tenth of the next dollar that comes to you. Do you say you can't afford it Yes you can. If your income is scant and uncertain, God is not unreasonable. He knows and understands and will never ask you to tithe what you have not got. You will at least have more money to spend for Christ in doing good, and as much for your own share if you do it. Does this sound more strange than that you can do more work in a year by working six days in the week than if you work seven? Thousands to-day testify to the benefits derived from the system. They say it pays, pays in spiritual blessings, pays in temporal prosperity, pays in happiness, pays in enhanced opportunities for usefulness and doing good, pays in deeper, higher, broader, happier Christian experience, pays in every good sense.

Do you say you don't know your exact income? You know approximately, you know what you have to-day. Make a start and tithe that. You have your Father's promises, and light will come as you need it. He will trust you if you will trust Him, and Oh! He will not forget all the hard financial problems—in the trying things that perplex when we are silent and no one knows. He will take all this into account and despite everything He will own and bless your faithful return of His bounty.

PROTECTS YOU FROM COLDS

As the only way to reach catarrh is by inhaling medicated air, it follows that the healing balsams of Catarrhozone can't fail to cure. It is a purely vegetable antiseptic—soothes and heals wherever it goes.

The germ-killing vapor is inhaled at the mouth and instantly spreads through all the breathing organs. Every case of bronchitis and catarrh is rooted out, and such health and strength is imparted that these troubles never again return.

Catarrhozone has cured thousands, and here is quoted the experience of Mrs. James A. Tweedie, of Jay Bridge, Maine, who sent for sixteen outfits of Catarrhozone for friends in her locality. This lady gives very full particulars why she did so. Her daughter, fourteen years old, had doctored for catarrh, obtaining no benefit, tried lots of other remedies, but al failed—recommended by a neighbor to try Catarrhozone. Instead of despairing, as she had good reason for doing, obtained Catarrhozone and before it was done, as she states, she was completely cured. No wonder she recommends it. Child had dropping in the throat, hawking, spitting; father thought she was going into consumption; could not sleep at night, and adds: "I only wish anyone suffering from catarrh to give it a fair trial."

Just Breathe "Catarrhozone" and You're Insured Against Colds, Coughs, Bronchitis and Catarrh.

Not difficult for Catarrhozone to cure, because it contains the essences of pine balsams and other antiseptics that simply mean death to catarrh and colds. Large size, guaranteed, $1; medium size, 50c; small trial size, 25c All dealers, or by mail from the Catarrhozone Company, Kingston, Ont.

HASTINGS CONCERT WAS GRAND SUCCESS

Hastings, Nov. 29.

A concert worthy of more than a passing notice was given here in aid of the Public Library fund on Friday evening last. It was attended by a very large audience and the programme rendered was one of high literary and artistic merit. Those who assisted are to be congratulated on the creditable manner in which each number was presented. It is safe to say that it is long since a programme giving so much pleasure has been presented here.

The thanks of the Library Board are due in a special manner to Reverend Father Bretherton for his excellent paper on "Reading." The subject was presented in a most entertaining and instructive manner. The elevating influence of good literature and the pernicious results of bad were graphically pictured and illustrated with apt incidents. The interested attention and many expressions of approval were a token of the pleasure given.

Mr. L. F. Clarry, Mrs. L. Fowlds, Miss Learmonth, Mr. J. C. Wilson, and Mr. H. Collette rendered vocal solos, which won hearty applause and all responded with encores, which gave equal pleasure. Dr. Nicholls mandolin solo and a piano solo by Mr. Nicholls were of great excellence.

Miss Choate, of Peterborough, violiniste, who kindly assisted in the programme, won for herself a warm place in the esteem of the audience by the clever mastery of her instrument and the grace and sympathy with which her numbers were interpreted. The brilliancy of her execution combined with a charming stage appearance called forth enthusiastic applause and she was obliged to respond to repeated encores.

The second part of the programme was introduced by a recitation and lullaby song by ten little girls, who also gave a gracefully performed drill, Miss Doxsee, the accompanist of the evening, easily sustained the high reputation which she already enjoys.

Rev. D. H. Thompson, who is a member of the Library Board ably performed the duties of chairman.

LECTURE TO-NIGHT ON FORESTRY

Mr. James Lawler, the secretary of the "Canadian Forestry Association", will deliver an illustrated lecture in the City Council chamber on the evening of November 30th, 1909, under the auspices of the Peterborough Board of Trade, on the subject of "Our Vanishing Forestry." The subject of this lecture which is free to the public, and to which ladies as well as gentlemen are invited, is to show the present state of Canada's forests and what should be done to perpetuate and develop them. This subject of conservation of resources is now becoming a most important one all over the world and particularly in the Dominion of Canada. A large part of the land of Canada is eminently suited for the growth of trees and for nothing else. If these areas are properly handled, they will yield a large and growing revenue for all time. On the other hand, the ruthless destruction of the forests leads to the spoiling of the streams for power and navigation purposes, seriously injures agriculture, and destroys the haunts of game and the recreation places of the people. All these points are brought out by the striking pictures which the lecturer will show. The public is cordially invited to this interesting and informative lecture.

PARAGRAPHS

The worker who watches the clock never acquires the right to set it.

No man has any better world before him than he is seeking to make about him.

When a man's religion is all hot air the only thing he thinks about is going up.

A damning heresy is to let the forms of any truth stand in the way of its facts and life.

A woman makes as much fuss about getting her complexion on straight as a man does about getting his hair cut.

Women, not to mention children, usually feel better after "a real good cry." It seems that tears not only soothe the spirit, but also serves another useful purpose, for an eminent specialist asserts that the saltiness of tears clears the eye and refreshes its delicate organism. In their passage down the face the tears sterilize the skin and kill germs upon which soap and water have no effect, and thus serve as a natural beauty bath.

Five Letters to a Telegraph Code Word

Ottawa, Nov. 30.—Some time since the three telegraph companies operating in Canada filed with the Railway Commission new tariffs under which they proposed to count every five letters contained in a telegraphic message as one word. The present tariffs allow ten letters to a word.

The application of this particular rule is chiefly in regard to code messages. The companies asked that the new tariffs should come into effect on Dec. 1, but the railway board will wait until the manufacturers' associations and other parties interested have been given a chance to be heard in protest.

The change will go into force in the United States Dec. 1.

COMPLIMENTARY REMARKS

The Superior (Wisconsin) News has the following to say of Miss Mae Tipton (Mrs Dick Simons):

Saying Bye-Bye.

The Monday blues came Sunday night this week.

The reason whereof was that it was the last appearance here of Miss Mae Tipton, our little Soubrette whose position will be handled hereafter by Miss Erna Stech.

We have worked with Miss Tipton so long, known her so well, and she has always been such a hard little worker and such a sunshiny little artist, so thoroughly professional, and so true a friend to each of us that we see her to the train and give her a fatherly kiss because there is going to be a big lump in our throat.

She will carry with her, however, the good will and best wishes of the company, and our hearty congratulation on the promotion which her style and charm and ability have won her.

If she is as successful as she deserves to be little May Tipton will be a "big noise" some of these fine days.

And while we are speaking of partings there is another good fellow and good actor leaving us, in the person of "Dick" Simons who is to be transferred to one of the other Himmelein stock companies and who, besides being a real character to his finger tips, is a comedian in the real meaning of the term; and there is a certain party, whose name we are too modest to mention, who owes more to this same "Dick" for coaching than he can repay.

He leaves behind him a friend for every man and woman in the company and a host of admirers of his capable work.

FIGHT WAS GENERAL

Sunday Afternoon Affair Included Dogs, Women and Men—Began Over Attempt to Separate the Canines—Lively While It Lasted.

A MIX-UP ALL AROUND

Every well-organized circus nowadays provides at least two or three rings to give their country friends full value for their admission fee. As a general rule the pretentious circuses have three rings and two platforms. On Sunday afternoon there was a circus with three distinct attractions in the vicinity, and although it did not last very long, eye witnesses state that it was exciting and up to the standard. A man and woman from the Cash Girl Co. were enjoying the afternoon by a walk in the outskirts of the city, and were walking along Lansdowne street, north of the Driving Park, and were only a stone's throw west of Lock street. They had a bull dog with them and the scrappy pup made itself disagreeable with a collie that was running ahead of an other man and two women, both of whom belonged to Peterborough. In a few minutes the tranquillity of the Sunday was disturbed by the angry barks of the two dogs, as they snapped at each other after the usual preliminary howls. The bull dog secured an early advantage and the local man came to the rescue of his collie. He had to use no gentle means to separate the n addened canines and the show man objected to the method as applied to his bull dog. The result was that the two men were involved in a fight themselves, and within a short time the whole party were in the melee, the two lady people and the dog-fight against the three Peterborough people had the collie. Those who occupied box seats for the fracas say that the bout was some class, and the pet names interchanged were not exactly orthodox. The battle waged hot for a time, dog against dog in ring No. 1, man against man in the centre ring, and the two women against the woman from the Cash Girl Co. on the left. It was a grand exhibition from all accounts and honours were about divided.

It is conjectured that Middleton lost his way en route to Emsdale on foot, falling a victim to the severe cold of that night.

The remains were brought to Sprucedale this afternoon, Crown Attorney Haight deciding an inquest unnecessary.

The newest and latest lines of toys are on sale there and children will find the department a veritable fairyland.

COMMITTED FOR TRIAL ON A CHARGE OF PERJURY

Mrs. Guthrie and Her Daughter Sent Up by the Magistrate After Hearing the Evidence in the Barrie Case Yesterday—Their Stories Contradicted.

Barrie, Nov. 29.—Mrs. Theresa Guthrie and her daughter, Clara, will appear at the December Sessions of the County Court, opening December 14, to answer to the charge of perjury in giving evidence at the inquest here. Magistrate Radenhurst found that a prima facie case had been made out against the daughter, three witnesses testifying that they had seen her in Allendale on November 17, whereas she swore that she had never been in Allandale. His Worship held that a prima facie case had been established against Mrs. Guthrie on the third count, "wherein she swore that Miss Meeks was with her when she expressed the trunks from Allandale to Elmvale." Magistrate Radenhurst refused the application for bail by defendants' solicitor, Mr. Boys, referring the question to the County Judge. Subsequently Judge Wissmer granted bail, accepting for each two sureties of $250 form Mr. Guthrie and Mr. Goodwin.

There were three charges of perjury against Mrs. Guthrie; (1) that no one went to Allandale with her on Nov. 17th, and 18th, except a certain Miss Meeks; (2) that nothing of hers was in the trunks taken to Allandale on Nov. 17th; (3) that Miss Meeks was with her on the 17th, when she told the expressman to send her trunks to Elmvale. The charge against Clara Guthrie was that she swore she was not in Allandale on the day in question. Baggageman Lowe, on examination, identified the two women as having been in Allandale on Nov. 18, about 11 a.m. This makes his evidence as to time tally with that of expressman Stone. The latter positively identified both women as having been in Allandale at the time specified. He also swore that Mrs. Guthrie told him that the other woman (Clara) was Miss Meeks. Bert Stubbs also positively identified Clara Guthrie as one whom he had seen at Allandale station on the morning in question.

Salvation Army Expects The Citizens To Lend Assistance

The re-opening of the Salvation Army Barracks on Saturday, Sunday and Monday, Dec. 4th, 5th and 6th, will be one of the most important events in the history of the local corps. The work done by this body is fully appreciated and the fact that the citadel had become too small for the attendances is a proof of the success that has marked the Army's work. The programme of the opening has been published and it is expected that the citizens will show their sympathy with the Army's efforts by generous donations on the occasion of the re-opening. The Army feels that the general public sympathizes with their endeavours and appreciates the good work that has been done and will be pleased to assist in a material manner.

Cavanagh being found guilty for the third time of a breach of the liquor license act. Mr. Jas. Haverson, K.C., of Toronto, was present in the interests of Mr. Cavanagh, and Mr. W. H. will Pay No Attention To Letters Not Signed

Mr. B. Lastar has called at the Examiner and wishes it stated for him that he has been receiving numerous letters, some attacking him for the communications he is writing to the papers. He wants it understood that as all the letters sent to him, so far, have not been signed with the names of the writers, he will not pay attention to any, unless names are signed. He further says, that as the space in the papers is costing him twenty-five cents per inch, single column, it is too expensive to waste on replies to people who are pitching into him from behind the fence. He adds that he has been urged to hire a hall and give the public the benefit of an exposition of his position. He would do so, but thinks he should not be called on to stand that additional expense, and there does not seem to be any willing to come forward and put up, with him, a share, which he is cheerfully willing to do, in the interests of fair discussion. He does not advocate, he says, drinking, or protecting the liquor sellers who sell illegally, but affirms that limiting drunkenness can better be accomplished by taking proper steps.

Missing Teeth Cause Of All The Fun In "Billy"

Losing four front teeth in a football game, "Billy," the hero of the three-act farce of the same name, which comes to the Grand Opera House to-morrow, Wednesday night, after an all-summer run at Daly's Theatre, replaces them with a false set. Being unaccustomed to the use of the substitutes, he accidentally loses them while in the act of proposing to his sweetheart. Unable to pronounce any word with an "s" or "c" in it, he cannot proceed further, with the result that the girl flees from him, terror-stricken. This, as well as the numerous other amusing complications take place aboard the steamship "Florida," en route from New York to Havana. "Billy" has taken passage on the boat in order to recuperate, taking with him his sister, Alice, who is to relieve him of the burden of carrying on conversation. Very much to his amusement he finds among the passenger list his sweetheart, her mother and his rival. These are the chief characters in the play, although before the three acts are over the author introduces some twenty others, all of whom go to enliven the merry farce. "Billy" was taken from a playlet entitled "Billy's Tombstones," which sketch, by the way, Alan Dale declared to be the funniest offering in vaudeville. The cast to be seen here includes Edgar Atchison Ely, Mrs. Stuart Robson, Jane Marbury, Marion Chapman, Franklin Jones, Spottiswoode Aitken and fifteen others.

OPEN BIDS IN JERSEY

Jeffries and Johnson Will not be Allowed to do so in New York.

New York, Nov. 29.—Because Police Commissioner Baker refuses to permit James J. Jeffries and Jack Johnson to open bids in this city Wednesday for their fight for the heavyweight championship of the world, they will go to Jersey for that purpose. Hoboken has been selected, and unless the men change their minds they will hold their meeting there Wednesday morning.

It is now conceded that the only offers that will have serious consideration will be those from California, as all other suggestions of bids are believed here to have been made for advertising purposes, and the fighters admit they want all of that which is going around for their own theatrical ventures.

LEPROSY FROM SWITCH OF INFECTED HAIR

Young Girl Purchased Switch Which Was From an Island in Caribbean Sea.

Pittsburg, Pa., Nov. 27.—Four weeks ago Miss Mamie Gillespie was head of the glove department in one of Pittsburg's largest stores, and to-day she is on a little island off the North Carolina coast suffering with a malignant growth of leprosy caused by wearing an infected human hair switch. As a result almost every employer of female labour has ordered that after the first of the month, none of the women are to wear false hair of any sort.

Some three months ago Miss Gillespie went to the hair department of the store where she is employed, and purchased a handsome blonde switch. After wearing it about two weeks, her body, from the breast up, became covered with a malignant growth which frightened the young woman. She went to Dr. L. M. Gordon, who became alarmed, and consulted several physicians, before he finally announced that the disease was leprosy, and that Miss Gillespie would have to be taken away and isolated, where she would not contaminate others.

Hair Was Diseased.

The girl's horror was pitiful, and she stoutly refused to be taken away until the government had investigated the matter.

It took several weeks for the U. S. officials to trace the lock of golden hair, but it was discovered to have been imported from an island in the Caribean sea, weher the Cuban Government sends its worst cases of leprosy. The hair had been sold in one of Pittsburg's most prominent stores, and this news caused a sensation, but the young woman had to go. Dr. Golden had warned all of his patients to stop wearing false hair, as this may be only the first case of the kind.

GREATEST SALE ON RECORD

"We have had nothing to equal it in our business experience," said Mr. Harry Adams speaking of the results of the advertising of the Blue-Tag Coat Sale "The rush on the opening day was so great that scores of ladies could not be waited on and it required double our staff to handle the crowd. Women came with the statement that they read our advertisements in The Examiner and on the blue hand bills and were impressed with the truthfulness of the ads. We told them to watch for further announcements as the Blue Tag Sale would last for two weeks."

EMIGRATION FROM THE UNITED STATES TO CANADA

The new territory in Western Canada which the Grand Trunk Pacific is opening up is so attractive to farmers, prospectors and investors in the Western States that Minnesota and other States in the Union interested are organizing through their commercial bodies movements designed to counteract the heavy migration that has set in o be such. A meeting of the Minnesota commercial organizations has been called for November 23rd to devise a method whereby some obstructions can be placed in the way of this emigration. The "St. Paul Despatch" of November 16th, says that:

"Considerable interest in the gathering has been manifested by cities in North Dakota, and several requests that they be permitted to be represented, have been received. While it was at first proposed to have the conference discuss only the possibility of securing settlers from Minnesota, it is now possible that a united effort will be made to keep American farmers this side of the Canadian border. The conference will prepare literature showing the actual land conditions in Minnesota and North Dakota. This literature will be scattered broadcast over the country and special efforts made to see that it reaches the persons who are at present interested in Canadian lands.

"It is said that thousands of farmers who have sold their land in Eastern States, pass through Minnesota, annually on their way to Canada. It is thought that if the advantage offered here could be shown to the fulgrants a large portion of them would make this their home."

ST. ANDREW'S CONCERT WAS MOST ENJOYABLE AFFAIR

Mr. Harold Jarvis and Mrs. Wyrick-Shafor Delighted a Large Audience Last Evening—Programme of Scotch Songs and Music.

The music-loving people of Peterborough owe a debt of gratitude to the choir of St. Andrew's church for having given them such an evening's enjoyment as was afforded by the appearance here in a concert of Mr. Harold Jarvis, the well known Toronto tenor, and Mrs. Helen Wyrick-Shafor, a clever elocutionist and reader. The concert was held in St. Andrew's church last night and was attended by a large and appreciative audience, who were most demonstrative in their applause with the result that every number was encored and as the artists generously responded, the programme was doubled in length and proportionately in enjoyment and merit. Being on the eve of St. Andrew's Day it was natural that the numbers should be Scotch in their nature and they were particularly appropriate to the occasion although the encore selections were not confined to Scotch offerings. Mr. Jarvis whose reputation is continental and who has appeared to great advantage before Peterborough audiences on many occasions was in rare form last evening and his fine voice was displayed at its best in the martial nature of the stirring Scotch songs that he had adopted for the occasion. "The Cameron Men," his first offering was splendidly rendered and earned the applause with which it was greeted. "The Highland Man's Toast" was another gem in Mr. Jarvis' numbers being sung with expression and vim that was irresistible in its effect upon the audience.

most enjoyable Scotch readings and Mrs. Wyrick-Shafor gave several recitations. She showed that she had complete mastery of the Scotch dialect and her clever rendering of her selections was very enjoyable, being responsible for round after round of applause.

The sympathetic accompaniments of Miss Maud C. Bradley, of Brockville,, added much to the enjoyment of the evening. The programme was as follows:

1. Selections from the "Bonnie Briar Bush ..... Fan McLaren
   Helen Wyrick-Shafor.
2. Song—"The Cameron Men" ....
   Harold Jarvis.
3. "Aboot wee Johnnie Paitterson"
   Helen Wyrick-Shafor.
4. Song—"The wee Bit o' Heather" ....Lemon
   Harold Jarvis.
5. "Laddie" ....
   Helen Wyrick-Shafor.
6. Song—"The Highlandman's Toast"
   Harold Jarvis.
7. Some Confusing Scotch Words..

The County Council went into session this afternoon at 2 o'clock for the concluding business of the year. The entire week will be necessary to handle the various questions on the county's slate. Warden R. N. Scott of Smith, was in the chair, and all the members of the Council were present, as follows: Messrs. A. Breault, Norwood, A. J. Kidd, Lakefield, J. Knox, Havelock; W. Brown, Monaghan; J. Fife, Otonabee; W. B. Stewart, Otonabee; Thos. Graham, Smith; R. Lees, P.S.I., and Mr. E. A. Peck, County Solicitor, were also present.

Warden's Address.

After the minutes of the last meeting had been read the Warden addressed the Council as follows:

"It is a great pleasure to me to open the last session of the County Council for this year. It has been a delight as Warden to conduct the business of my office with the harmony which has marked the sessions. There has been no dissatisfaction as far as I know and I take this opportunity of expressing to you my thanks for the manner in which the county's business has been dealt with and for the harmony which has been evidenced. There are several questions to be presented at this session. Probably the most important is the appointment of a new inspector for the new district to be formed by the counties of Peterborough and Victoria. A deputation is expected to wait on this Council on Friday, and I hope you will seriously consider the matter in order to appoint the most capable man for the position. I am sorry that this session will likely be my last as I intend to retire from office at the close of the year. I have been Reeve of Smith for 6 1-2 years and for four years was elected by acclamation. I have been on the County Council for 5 1-2 years and I do not wish to be selfish, therefore I will retire and leave the position of Reeve for some of the other men of Smith. I again thank you for the support you have given me during the past year."

Warden Scott's address was greeted with applause.

The reports of the grand jurors of the Spring and Fall Assizes were received on motion of Messrs. Shaw and Darling.

A communication, signed by Messrs. A. B. Greenbanks, Blake, and combe, Packenham, Calder and others of Norwood, was read, asking that Mr. James L. Johnston be appointed County Constable to succeed Mr. E. T. Scott, who has removed to Hastings. It was stated that there is no constable within six miles of Norwood since Mr. Scott moved, and the petitioners ask for the appointment of a man. Mr. Isaac Pieffer wrote asking for the position vacated by Mr. Scott. The two communications were referred to the Committee on Appointments.

New Inspector.

One of the principal questions to be considered is the appointment of a new Public School Inspector for the county.

Two of the inspectors, Mr. J. Coyle Brown, of Peterborough County, and Mr. Knight, of Victoria County, have both resigned. The educational department has decided upon a rearrangement of the work of the Inspectors of the counties of Peterborough and Victoria the appointment of one inspector to take the place of two resigned. Heretofore, there have been four inspectors for these counties, but hereafter, according to the new subdivision there will be only three. A committee of Victoria County Council will wait on the Peterborough Council to arrange and agree on a new inspector.

On motion of Messrs. Breault and Shaw this matter was referred to the Committee of the Whole Council.

Mr. Brackenbridge of Norwood, tendered his resignation as trustee of the Norwood High School. He recommended Father Conway as his successor.—Referred to Committee on Schools.

Another question to be considered is that of settlement of the arrangement made by the County with the Government in connection with the Buckhorn bridge. The payment for the new hennery and piggery recently provided for the House of Refuge will have to be made. The matters in connection with the new bridges at Squaw river and at Allandale will also be reported on as well as the usual matters that come within the scope of the Council. All the members are present.

PERSONAL AND SOCIAL

Miss Pearl Haskell and Miss Rosa Moore spent Saturday in Toronto.

Miss Eunice Mann, of Bridgenorth, spent Sunday with Miss Bella Mann, 673 Water St.

Mr. Fred Fetherston and son Willie left to-day for Vernon, B.C., where they will join Mr. Fetherston and reside in the future.

Mrs. R. R. Rogers, 805 George St., will receive on Thursday afternoon, December 2nd, and not again until after the New Year.

Miss V. B. Marvin, of Albert College, Belleville, has been elected by the young ladies of the college as their only representative to the Student Volunteer Convention for Foreign Missions, to be held in the city of Rochester from Dec. 29, to Jan. 2, inclusive. We congratulate her on her election, as this is perhaps the greatest movement of modern times, and the convention meets only once in four years. Miss Marvin will (D.V.) be accompanied by her father, Dr. Marvin, of Warsaw.

FORESTRY PROBLEMS

Mr. James Lawler, Secretary of the Canadian Forestry Association, Will Speak on This Subject To-night in Council Chamber

SHOULD BE WELL ATTENDED

Mr. Jas. Lawler, secretary of the Canadian Forestry Association, will give an illustrated lecture in the ity Council chamber to-night on Canadian Forestry Problems. The lecture is under the auspices of the Peterborough Board of Trade, and the subject is one of supreme importance and there should be a large attendance. There is no admission charge and every person is cordially welcome. Mr. Lawler is a fluent and interesting speaker with a comprehensive grasp of his subject and his address should be found very entertaining as well as highly instructive and interesting.

ENTERTAINED AT Y. W. C. A.

Knox Church Young People's Society Had a Very Enjoyable Evening.

The Knox Church Young Peoples' Society walked from the church in a body to the Y.W.C.A. last night where they held their missionary evening. Miss Mamie Menzies was in the chair, as vice-president. After the opening exercises, a song was rendered by Mr. A. C. Davenport. A paper on Corea, the country and its people," by Mr. Roy Laing, was most interesting and helpful. Miss Ella Warren then spoke on the "Outlook for Missions." The speaker referred to the earnest endeavours of the Coreans and their liberality in giving to the church.

Miss Lottie Childs gave a very straight pointed argument, her paper, "The Young People Should be Interested in Missions," was well put forth, telling of the urgency of working for the heathen.

A quartette by Misses Menzies and Williamson and Messrs. Read and Donaldson, was well rendered.

Miss McCalla then spoke to the society, saying how pleased she was in the name of the Y.W.C.A., to see such a large gathering of young people, especially of young men, which was indeed a feature. The secretary of the association, referred to the evening's addresses, and praised highly the meeting throughout. She heartily invited the young ladies to come any time and see her, she being willing to help them. The work of the Y.W.C.A. was made clear to those present. The young men were also invited to be in communication with the Y.W.C.A. After this meeting, Miss McCalla then showed the visitors the gymnasium, after which light refreshments were served, by the young ladies of the "Y." Mr. W. Patten, as president of Knox Society, thanked Miss McCalla for the kind hospitality shown to them, which was heartily applauded. The secretary replied, saying what pleasure it gave her to have them spend the evening together. The meeting at Knox church next Monday is a social gathering.

GUELPH STUDENTS IN SECOND PLACE

Examiner Special.

Chicago, Nov. 30.—The Ontario Agricultural College students, competing as judges of stock at the International Live Stock Show to-day carried off second honours, their rivals from the Iowa Agricultural College carrying off first prize by a very narrow margin. The students, who judged the cattle and hogs, were allowed 50 points on their choicest and 50 points on their reasons for such choice. The Iowa College was allowed 4,940 points, while the Ontario students were next with 4,740 points. As a result of the contest the men composing the Iowa team are $100 richer, and captured scholarships offered by J. Ogden Armour, the Chicago packer. They also won for the second time the trophy offered for the best of student judges. They will have to win it again next year, however, in order to retain permanent possession of the prize.

A PRACTICAL RECOGNITION.

A circumstance which illustrates the growing importance of Canada in the eyes of our neighbours to the south of us, both as a news field and a factor to be reckoned with in international relations is the establishment at Ottawa of a news bureau by two leading United States journals, the Chicago Tribune and the New York Herald; and from the first time in Canadian history the presence in the press gallery of the parliament buildings of two United States newspaper representatives, has, to the thoughtful, a large significance. The present session of Parliament will be called upon to deal with several questions of international interest—the fiscal questions arising out of the Payne Tariff, and the ratification of the French treaty; possibly the question connected with the presence on the great lakes, in contravention of the Rush-Bagot treaty, of armed vessels of the United States, and, no doubt the initiation of a Canadian naval establishment will be matters concerning which our neighbours may consider Canadian action worth watching at close range.

JUDICIAL QUALIFICATIONS.

Considerable press, as well as parliamentary comment, is being made upon the propriety or otherwise, of the appointment to judicial positions of men who have rendered services to the country in a political capacity. Of course, it is desirable that our judges should be in a position to be strictly impartial, politically and otherwise in the performance of their functions, and it is not disputed that this is and has been a characteristic of our judiciary. An incident in parliament brought the matter to special attention, the Opposition seeking to show that because the name of a gentleman who had been active in politics, had been suggested to the Government for a judicial appointment, a great outrage had been committed. A Government cannot be held responsible for being tendered advice upon any subject. It can only be held responsible for the action it takes. In this country where such general interest is taken in politics, it would be difficult to find a man for any judicial position who has not, or has not had, some practical interest in political matters—who has not, and has not had opinions, the natural result of a capacity for thinking, of being alive. The only apparent way to secure candidates for judgeship to meet the ideas of the Opposition in their hypercritical moments, is to segregate them from childhood in such a manner as to shut them out from all social and public influences, which would, of course, be an absurdity. Our Conservative friends have a somewhat cynical distrust of human nature, which reaches its intensest point when it is applied to human nature as it exists in a Liberal Government. The Oopposition, seemingly, needs the help of the lantern of Diogenes only when it is conducting a search for an honest man outside the ranks of its own body.

CONSERVATIVE TREMORS.

Some of our good Conservative politicians, in order to embarrass the government in connection with the ratification of the treaty with France, demand that this country manage its affairs with reference to the attitude and action of the United States. These same gentlemen say that the attitude of Sir Wilfrid Laurier on the naval question tends to independence of the Mother country, which means of course withdrawal from the Empire; but they deprecate any assertion on the part of Canada of independence of the United States. That country stands to suffer more from a tariff war than Canada. The chairman of the committee on pulp and paper of Congress last sesion asserts that the United States "may well be alarmed at the danger of a Tariff war with Canada, growing out of the new rates on pulp and print paper," and in earnestness of his sincerity he has prepared two measures, one to postpone the application of the maximum tariff till January next and the other to provide that the maximum tariff shall not be construed to apply to pulp and print paper imported from Canada. We do not like to be coerced. Mr. Mann, the chairman referred to, says that unless some such legislation as he proposes is adopted, Canada, smarting under the injustice of the Payne tariff, is likely to forbid the exportation of pulp wood from Canada to the United States, thereby inflicting a serious blow to the newspaper and book publishing business. In the matter of pulp it appears that the United States is the present suppliant and the prospective sufferer, from the tariff irritation. The little Canadians assume to fear the irritation that the ratification of the French treaty will arouse. Sir Wilfrid Laurier has taken the stand that if the United States want reciprocity with Canada the overtures must come from them. Heretofore United States obstruction to trade with Canada, has led us to seek with self advantage, other markets; and we can afford in the matter of trade relations with our neighbours to be sufficiently stiff in the backbone to hold our self respect if we do not hold all our trade with our southern neighbours.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

British Columbia is already beginning to pay the penalty of burying the "Grit" party under a landslide for the sake of a railway. The latest despatches tell us that a railway near Vancouver has been buried under a mud slide.

If the champion Chicago beef trust sets the prices for the continent, it is now wonder that we pay such stiff prices for beef in Peterborugh. The past year "earned"—a word used for convenience of expression, not for its correctness—$7,127,924, above all expenses, equivalent to 35 per cent. on its $20,000,000 of stock.

According to the latest despatches only one Liberal was returned in the late British Columbia general elections. He will have his work cut out—to watch a Government majority of thirty, as leader of the Opposition, and be the chief Opposition whip, to boot, not to speak of the possible upcrop of an insurrection in the ranks of his party following such as fill the days with unrest and the nights with unrest of Mr. Borden.

THE "DEADLY PARALLEL."

The Mail and Empire's "deadly parallel" contrasting Australia's proposal to place its navy at the disposal of Great Britain in time of war and Sir Wilfrid's statement that the Canadian navy would go to no war without the consent of the Canadian Parliament is being repeated down by the sea, the Halifax Herald joining in the hue and cry. Sir Wilfrid's position is constitutional as well as logical, and has the distinguished endorsation of the London Times, which, with the example of Canada in the emergency represented by the Boer war before it, has no doubt that if trouble came the Premier of Canada, the Government of Canada, no matter of what political complexion, and the Parliament of Canada would do its duty and bear its share in whatever fighting was called for, either with land forces, or sea forces. For the sake of having a "drive" at the Liberal Premier and Government of Canada, a certain number of Conservative journals are willing to asperse the loyalty of the whole Canadian people.

Sir Charles Tupper, by the way, is out in a declaration expressed in a letter to Hon. R. L. Borden, leader of the Opposition, rebuking another wing of the Conservative party which wants to make a cash contribution—send good Canadian money to Great Britain to be spent there in bearing Canada's share in imperial naval defence. Sir Charles points out that it is the duty of Canada to go ahead and organize her own navy. The old Cumberland war horse takes the right view. No other course would be worthy of our dignity or consonant with our position of national autonomy. No other course would so contribute to the development of national unity of sentiment, and lead to development of national resources, and the establishment and expansion of national industries, that would result from the adoption of a policy of not only creating an independent cooperative navy, but, in time, of constructing our own ships and establishing a great shipbuilding industry that would include both offensive and defensive ships, but build the ships required by the presently great and continuously expanding passenger and commercial sea-borne traffic of Canada.

MADAME STEINHEIL IS NOW IN ENGLAND

London, Dec. 1.—Madame Steinheil, who recently was acquitted in Paris of the charge of murdering her husband, arrived at London yesterday. She travelled under the name of Madame Dumont.

The woman evaded the crowd of waiting newspaper reporters and proceeded to an hotel. Traced to this place, she declined to see anybody, and the manager of the hotel, upon learning her identity, requested her to leave.

The "Weatherman" Will Give A Talk To-night

An interesting evening may be expected at the regular meeting of the Peterborough Centre of the Royal Astronomical Society, to-night, in the Collegiate Institute, when Mr. R. F. Stupart, director of the Meteorological Observatory will give an address upon "Wind and Weather." The "Weatherman," as Mr. Stupart is popularly termed, is a very interesting speaker, and as his talk will be on the subject of how the weather is watched by experts and the probabilities are arrived at, it will be of interest to those who have not paid much attention to the subject of astronomy. A cordial invitation is extended to the public to be present. There is no admission charge, although the Society goes to some expense and trouble in securing such speakers as Mr. Stupart.

On Friday night, when Capt. Bernier lectures here under the auspices of the Astronomical Society, owing to the great expense involved it will be necessary to make an admission charge.

ST. ANDREW'S DAY

(By Rev. John Mackie, D.D.)

To-day, the thirtieth of November, is St. Andrew's Day, and its return will fan the flame of patriotism that burns in every Scottish heart, the more brightly the further off it beats from the dear old land. Without contradiction it may be said that there is no land, all the world over, where the love of country is so strong and so clearly manifested as in the land and kingdom of Scotland. I fyou ask anyone conversant with the subject what is the characteistic of the French, the answer will be —politeness. Of the Spanish—pride. Of the Portuguese—treachery. Of the Russians—ambition. Of the Turks—sloth and sensuality. And so on. Of the Scotch—patriotism. They stand forth in the front of all nations of the earth, as lovers of their country. Patriotism is the pre-eminent national characteristic.

The Scottish heart holds with a tightness the native land that makes very looseness the hold of others of their country. They love the land in the length of it and the breadth of it, as their own soul; they not only call it their own country, but they feel it to be their own. It has voices to them which they alone can hear and understand, and influences which they alone are sensitive of. Its everlasting snow-crowned mountains, its purple heathery hills; its green forests of fir, and birch and beech; its limpid lochs, and whimpling burns; its way-sides of foxglove, yellow broom and golden whin, and ditches of forget-me-nots, and gaigit-robins and speedwell; the white-washed farm houses, and the straw-thatched stacks and ricks beside them; the simple kirk, and homely manse, and the kirk-yard with the better-skelter graves, and the gray headstones leaning as they like and simply lettered; and the school house not far off, filled with hthe buzz of all the children of the clachan, take a grip of the Scottish heart that no other hearts have ever felt. The song of laverock and of lintie, mavis and finch; the chatter of the yellow-yarlick on the hawthorn hedge, and the crooning of the cushie doo in the silent woods make music in the Scottish soul that no minstrel of foreign grove, however sweet and strong, can silence. Every bird, and flower, and bush, and burn, have their pet name, and diminutive term of endearment; every mountain peak, and rounded hill, every dusky glen, and fertile strath, every rushing river, and silvery loch—the whole land—is a living creature giving inspiration to the life that walks thereon, and holding constant ennobling converse with the soul that caught its first look of heaven from its bosom. This when there; and when far away over weary stretch of ocean, in the depths of tropic or of frigid wilds, the Scottish soul retains its fadeless vision, and finds the beauty and grandeur of other scenes only in their fancied or faint resemblance to the everlasting realities of peerless loveliness and sublimity in the dear old land; and the Scottish heart, while hearing many a strain of sweetness, and wooing song outside, is evermore listening to a music within that strengthens and satisfies—the music of those voices from far-away, whose sweetness can never pall, and whose reign can never cease.

How many a heart beneath the faded tartan remnant by a power not its will, a power it devoutly calls Providence, beating in the busy centres or in the vast solitudes of this magnificently immense Dominion, feels the force and glow, all the intense fervour and fulness of holy passion that the exiled Hebrew by the rivers of Babylon felt, when his soul sang out: "If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning. If I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth; if I prefer not Jerusalem above my chief joy!"

POST CARD COLUMN

Editor Post Card Columnt

I have been very much interested in the letters of one B. Laster who has taken up the fight for the liquor interests apparently single handed. To impress the public with his weight and power he refers with pride to the fact that certain governments put a price upon his head and his pen, and consequently leads us to conclude that his ability as a forceful writer is worth money.

On reading the first two letters of this gentleman one is impressed with the fact that the writer is evidently a man of foreign extraction or illiterate considering the manner in which his ideas are jumbled together in senseless words. But in the letter which appeared last evening I noted a wonderful change. The style is changed. The language is different. It puzzled me.

Now, altogether aside from the merits of the arguments of the case I am interested in this wonderful transformation. It is a case apparently of a literary Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde. And I desire to fathom it in the following offer.

I will present to the Childrens' Aid Society of Peterborough the sum of Twenty-five Dollars if Mr. B. Laster can prove to the satisfaction of a committee of competent men that he was the unassisted author of all these letters.

Mrs. W. J. Hammond, Hamilton, Ont., writes: "I beg to say that I have used Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup for my youngest girl who was troubled every winter with bronchitis and very severe colds. After the first bottle was finished I got more, and always kept a bottle in her room at night. GAVE A LECTURE ON SCOTLAND

Rev. Mr. McLean of Colborne in St. John's Schoolroom Last Evening

The Sunday School hall of St. John's Church was filled with a large audience last evening on the occasion of the Scottish lecture given by Rev. Mr. McLean of Colborne. The chairman was Mr. D. Hughes-Charles, who in a very able manner introduced the various numbers on the programme. Previous to the lecture vocal solos were given by Messrs. Herb. Morphet and George Chandler and a piano selection by Mr. Cameron.

Rev. Mr. McLean is an interesting speaker. He is a Scotchman and has travelled all over Scotland. He opened with several very laughable Scotch stories and then briefly outlined the history of his native country. The lecturer then took the audience on a personally conducted tour of Scotland and each view that was shown was briefly described. Taking up the religious life of the Scotch the speaker showed that it was really the Scotch who had evangelized the English. The Episcopal church in Scotland to-day, however, was a large and rapidly growing organisation.

In conclusion the speaker paid a high tribute to Rev. Canon Davidson he succeeded as rector at Colborne. He said that after twenty years the results of the good work done by Rev. Canon Davidson still remained very much in evidence.

A vote of thanks was tendered Rev. Mr. McLean and the evening was closed by singing "Auld Lang Syne."

COLD ON THE LUNGS

This letter gives some idea of the confidence placed in Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine by people who know by experience of its exceptional merit. Mrs. R. D. Turner, Broadview, N.W.T., writes:—"We have seven children and have used Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine for them all when troubled with colds on the lungs. We buy four bottles at a time and always keep it in the house, believing there is nothing so good for coughs and colds."

Mr. and Mrs. Tillcock will reside on Bolivar street.

EMERY—DRUMMOND.

MANUEL WENT HOME WITHOUT HIS WIFE

Princess Kept Away From Windsor Castle Where He Was Guest.

London, Eng., November 29.—King Manuel was a guest of King Edward at Windsor Castle last week. But the King's grandaughter Princess Alexandra, to win whose hand certain gossips guessed was the young Portuguese sovereign's errand in England, was not included in any of the royal parties.

She was kept away by her parents who took that effectual method of squelching the rumours of matrimonial plans. The Duke and Duchess of Fife are not anxious to have their daughter mount a tottering throne, and they have left it to be known as a diplomatic explanation that they could never consent to her changing her religion.

Princess Louise, of Battenberg, whom the knowing regarded as Manuel's forlorn hope among the English princesses, was also absent from the gatherings at Windsor Castle, although her parents, Prince and Princess Louis of Battenberg, were members of the royal house party.

The only likely marriageable princess King Manuel met was Princess Patricia of Connaught, whose name has never been suggested as a possible consort for him, though she is the most attractive of all the British princesses. She has always been credited with declaring that she would never marry out of England.

The truth is, and the public has begun to realise it, King Manuel came here simply to pay a state visit and not to seek his wife.

His bright, boyish good humour delighted everybody about the court, from King Edward down. His pathetic position anyway naturally won special sympathy for him.

SHOULD HELP RAILWAYS

Prompt Handling of Freight by Shippers Would Avert Car Famine Danger.

An article on the subject of car supply, which appears in this month's issue of "Industrial Canada," the official organ of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, has caused a good deal of discussion, and apparently has been misunderstood in some quarters.

A railway freight official said yesterday that a careful reading of the article would show that the association had not only made no attack on the railroads, but that it was joining heartily in the movement to avert loss to the business world, always occasioned by want of cars, and conveyed to its members a warning of the impending danger unless shippers and receivers joined with the railroads in keeping freight cars on the move. The railroads say that there is really no car shortage at present, and it would seem that the public could aid greatly in preventing one if cars were detained only such length of time as is necessary to load and unload freight. In this way the freight car equipment of the railroads, in the use of which the public has a joint interest, could probably be made to supply all the wants of the shipping world, and the great loss and embarrassment to both the shipping public and the railroads through car famines, which have been of almost yearly occurrence in the past, would be obviated.—Montreal Gazette, Nov. 3, 1909.

CHARGED WITH ASSAULT

Woman Had Her Husband in Police Court This Morning.

A well known resident was charged in the police court with assaulting his wife, on Sunday afternoon last. Mr. S. T. Medd appeared for the accused and pleaded not guilty. The prisoner's wife stated that her husband had called her abusive names and had struck at her on Sunday. She had only been married a little over two years and in that time had suffered a great deal from her husband's ill temper.

His Worship suggested that the two go downstairs and try to come to an amicable agreement. This was done and the matter was dropped.

MAJORITY OF THE GREAT WRITERS WERE UNMARRIED

Statistics Show That There is an Incompatibility Between Marriage and the Literary Calling---Writers Who Married Were Unhappy.

Mr. Sidney Low, a well-known English writer, has lately gone to the trouble of compiling a list of the representative literary men of Great Britain during nearly three centuries, with a view of ascertaining their "condition in regard to marriage." His conclusion is that there is an incompatibility between marriage and the literary calling. The majority of great writers were unmarried and the majority of benedicts among them were not happily married. The list is published in the Nineteenth Century:

Shakespeare—Married at 18, with hasty irregularity, a woman of humble origin, eight years older than himself. The union seems to have been unsympathetic and the terms of the poet's will point to an estrangement between husband and wife.

Milton—Married three times. The poet's first wife left him after a few weeks. He wrote tracts on divorce, and paid his addresses to a very handsome and witty gentlewoman until the wife returned.

Dryden—Married—unhappily.

Bunyan—Married twice — satisfactorily.

Hobbes—Unmarried.

Samuel Butler—Married late in life.

Locke—Unmarried.

Swift—Secretly married to a woman with whom he never lived, and whom he hardly ever saw except in presence of a third person.

Defoe—Married; had several children. Little known of the circumstances of his domestic life.

Addison—Married three years before his death. The marriage is generally said to have been uncomfortable, (Dict. of Nat. Biog.)

Steele—Twice married; happily in spite of irregularities of conduct.

Prior—Unmarried.

Pope—Unmarried.

Richardson—Unmarried.

Smollet—Married; satisfactorily.

Samuel Johnson—Married a vulgar and affected widow 20 years his senior. The marriage considered a grotesque affair by Johnson's friends and contemporaries. Childless.

Gray—Unmarried.

Hume—Unmarried.

Sterne—Married. Got on badly with his wife and had various love affairs and sentimental philanderings.

Adam Smith—Unmarried.

Boswell—Married; frequently unfaithful to his wife.

Goldsmith—Unmarried.

Sheridan—Married; not unhappily.

Cowper—Unmarried.

Burns—Married to a woman who had been his mistress. Occasionally unfaithful to her afterwards.

Crabbe—Married; satisfactorily.

Scott—Married; not quite sympathetically.

Southey—Married twice. First wife became insane. Married second wife at age of 66, just before complete failure of his own mental faculties.

Charles Lamb—Unmarried.

Hazlitt—Married twice. First wife divorced him; second refused to live with him.

Leigh Hunt—Married, not quite happily.

Thomas Moore—Married; satisfactorily.

De Quincey—Married; happily, so far as the husband's habits permitted. Wife died anno aetat, 39. "One can suppose that hers had not been the easiest or happiest of lives."—Prof. Masson.

Macaulay—Unmarried.

Edward Bulwer Lytton—Separated from his wife.

Newman—Unmarried.

John Stuart Mill—Unmarried.

Herbert Spencer—Unmarried.

Darwin—Married, satisfactorily.

Ruskin—Marriage annulled.

Landor—Quarrelled with his wife, and lived many years apart from her.

Dickens—Separated from his wife.

Thackeray—Wife became insane.

Charles Reade—Unmarried.

Froude—Married, satisfactorily.

Matthew Arnold—Married; satisfactorily.

Kingsley — Married; satisfactorily.

Tennyson—Married; satisfactorily.

Browning—Married; satisfactorily.

Edward Fitzgerald—Separated from wife.

James Thompson ("B. V.")—Unmarried.

William Morris—Married; satisfactorily.

Walter Pater—Unmarried.

Nature makes the cures after all.

Now and then she gets into a tight place and needs helping out.

Things get started in the wrong direction.

As Well as a Mark of Beauty is Luxurious Hair.

It has been truly said that the crowning glory of our race is a luxuriant head of hair.

It used to be thought that this was one of the blessings which the gods bestow capriciously and it is only recently that scientists have discovered that its beauty is dependent upon the absence of a minute germ which flourishes in the hair follicles, where it destroys the life of the hair.

To restore this life and kill the germs which cause the mischief is the mission of Newbro's Herpicide.

Herpicide surely kills the germs, and is the best hair dressing on the market.

It contains no grease or oil, neither will it stain or dye.

PATTI'S VOICE HAS EARNED $4,000,000

The Great Prima Donna Celebrates 50th Anniversary of Her Debut.

London, Dec. 1.—Adelina Patti last week celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of her debut as an operatic singer at the New York Academy of Music, Nov. 24, 1859, when she appeared as Lucia. She was then under seventeen, but had made a public appearance on the concert platform nine years before.

In the year of Patti's operatic debut Strakosch paid her $100 a week. At her first operatic appearance in London in 1861 she received $750 a month. Previous to her first marriage in 1869 her earnings never exceeded $800 a night, but later, when Mme. Nilsson was engaged for $1,000 Patti got $1,050.

Although these prices cut a small figure in comparison with those the song birds received at the Metropolitan and Manhattan, it is calculated that Patti's voice has earned her about $4,000,000.

WHY NOT LET GIRL PROPOSE TO MAN?

Chicago Clergyman Says Men Should Be Compelled to Wed.

Chicago, Dec. 1.—"There is only one good reason for not getting married, and that is ill-health,' says the Rev. Frederick E. Hopkins, of Pilgrim Congregational church.

"The State should compel men to marry for the same reason as it compels education and in some countries military service. It is for the welfare of the state.' that there should be the largest number of homes and a normal and regular increase of population.

"'If after a suitable acquaintance a girl would like to marry a man, but he does not ask her, then let her ask him. Why not? If she wants him she will probably give him a good many hints anyhow, so why not speak right out and ask for what you want? It is useless conventionality and a silly custom, any way we look at it, to stick to the old-fashioned way."

GORDON CAMPBELL ON R.M.C TEAM

Has Made Good at Quarter on the Snappy Cadet Line.

If R. M. C. defeats Dundas in the play-off likely next Saturday Gordon Campbell will have the honour of being on the Canadian Intermediate Championship team. His course at T. C. S. was marked by splendid work in more than one department of athletics and helped to bring at least one Rugby and cricket championship to the Lakeside College. Both were proud events for T. C. S. and Campbell, at quarter, did splendid work, giving promise of a brilliant future. He commenced his studies at R. M. C. in the fall of this year and found a ready berth on the Rugby team, and has played all season. Dundas will give the cadets a mighty argument and if the game goes to R. M. C. Peterborough will have one representative on a Canadian Championship team this year.

THE VARSITY TEAM AS SEEN BY A FOOTBALL AUTHORITY

Blue and White Machine an Indication of the Possibilities of the New Rules, Says "Biddy" Barr---Plays Were Splendidly Carried Out.

By Rev. A. F. Barr.

The Varsity team gave an exhibition of developed team play such as has not been seen on the football field for several years. At no time in the game after the first try was there the slightest doubt of the result.

The game between Hamilton and Ottawa was simple in the extreme—with hardly a sign of any development. It was old-time football varied slightly to meet the necessities of the ten-yard rule.

The Overwhelming Advantage.

On Saturday there was a revelation of team work. The teams were evenly matched as to weight, but Varsity had more speed and snap. But their overwhelming advantage was in the variety of plays in which they had been trained.

The Ottawa team had nothing at all compared to their opponetns. Williams used what few devices he had, and certainly did his utmost to ward off the attack, but everything looked alike to the students.

The following up by the Varsity team could hardly have been improved upon. They were always on the ball, and again and again gained almost the full length of Gall's kicks by tackling the Ottawa halves.

Analyzing the Result.

Analyze the result and you find that Varsity made 5 tries in a variety of ways, and all resulted, not from errors of their opponents, but from magnificent combined work. The first by two fast rushes by the wings, the second on a long pass to outside half; the third, a short onside kick; the fourth a run by Lawson, following some excellent passes by wings, and the last by one of Lawson's ponderous runs. Now look at the other side—one try by Ottawa, and that resulting practically from Gall's one error—kicking into his own scrimmage.

That shows better than anything else the comparative merits of the teams. One team with a great variety of plays not merely at its disposal, but trained so carefully that they could put them into operation with speed and perfection. The other team showing no more development of football than one would expect after about the second week of the season.

A Lesson to be Learned.

This match ought to have a great influence on Rugby. There were any number of young players in that magnificent crowd, and what they saw ought to make them realize the importance of careful training. There was a great deal behind that team play of the Varsity team. There was careful, conscientious practice of the players. There was the insistent demand of Harry Griffith that each player should learn his part and then do the work that he was expected to do. Then behind that was the study of the game by the captain and coach, the careful planning of each play, and the consideration of the best method of attack and of defence in the various situations of a hard-fought match.

Chances Overlooked.

That reveals the weak spot in the majority of teams. Most of them have the best of material, but they never get beyond a certain stage. The main reason is that the authorities in charge do not study the game and find out the possibilities. As I said last week, the present rules give scope for high-class team work, but what is the use of having coaches and managers and captains if they do not try to do something more than get the players to kick and run and tackle.

Rugby in Books.

None, up to the present, has made any systematic attempt to show in black and white what can be done in one game, but there are books available on football as played in the States, from which many valuable suggestions can be obtained. Yost's book, issued a few years ago, is an excellent one, but, of course, it is not applicable as a whole to our game on account of the off-side interference.

Credit Where It Was Due.

Williams certainly handled his team well with his limited resources, and Stronach upheld his reputation as one of the best outside wings in the country. Newton was exceedingly cool all through the game, and handled his team in excellent fashion. To him, to Harry Griffith, to the whole team, all honour is due for the magnificent game they played on Saturday. And we must not forget the substitutes, and the "scrubs," who by their hard unrecognized work during the training made such a result possible.

WILL NOT TAKE ANY CHANCES

Varsity Team Will Practise Faithfully for the Game With Parkdale Saturday.

Toronto, Nov. 29.—Arrangements were made to-day for the final game for the Canadian Rugby Championship between 'Varsity and Parkdale, the O.R.F.U. senior champions.

The game will be played at Rosedale at 2.30 p.m. The 'Varsity team, while expecting to win, are not holding the Parkdale team too cheaply. Said Captain Newton to-day: "I understand they have a good, big fast wing line and a steady back division. We do not intend to take any chances. All of our men came out of Saturday's game in good condition."

In O.R.F.U. circles it is believed that Parkdale will make a much better showing than Ottawa against the students, and may surprise the out-of-town wiseacres, who have been underrating everybody's ability but their own.

The Parkdale team will hold a signal practice to-night t the Mutual Street Rink, and will work indoors every night this week at the rink. They will play the same team that beat T.A.A.C. for the O.R.F.U. championship.

Coach Griffith, of Varsity, stated to-day that 'Varsity will play the same team against Parkdale Lawson, Gall, Newton, Ritchie and every other player will be in his place. The team will practise every night the same as for the Ottawa game. There are no sinecures in football.

RECEIPTS WERE LARGE

Figures of Saturday's Crowd Show That It Was a Record Breaker.

The total receipts amounted to the enormous sum of $7,823, rpresenting an attendance close to 11,000 people, exclusive of the dead heads. The chief expenses were $400 for the new stand, $900 for the grounds, and $250 for the Ottawa team's expenses. The teams will receive about $3,100 apiece.

The record for the three years 'Varsity has been in the Canadian final shows the following sums received by each team.

1906—Varsity and Ottawa, $1,400.
1908—Varsity and Hamilton, $2,000
1909—Varsity and Ottawa, $3,100.

READY TO MEET FREDDY WELSH

Battling Nelson Says He Is Prepared to Take on the Englishman Any Time.

Toronto, Nov. 29.—Battling Nelson, the lightweight champion, who is here at a burlesque theatre with the pictures of his famous 23-round fight with Dick Hyland last spring, says that he will fight Freddie Welsh, the English champion, just as soon as any one will stage the fight.

"I'm not running away from him," says Nelson, "but I won't punch his head the first time I meet him on the street; nor will I fight him for a bag of peanuts."

Nelson, a sturdy fellow, with a pair of cauliflower ears and a nose flattened out like a pancake, is an entertaining talker, but lacks the bombast of the majority of scrappers. He says he has lost his decision in a dozen battles, but has accomplished what no other lightweight has done—knocked out every top-notch lightweight of his day.

"Everybody wants to fight me," says Nelson. "I'll fight any one if there is money enough in sight."

Nelson says that while Johnson is a grand fighter, he is going the pace that kills, and thinks that if Jeffries ever comes back to anything like form he will win.

RUGBY

'VARSITY VS. YALE

Montreal, Nov. 20.— (Special) — Every Montrealer who saw Varsity smother Ottawa Rough Riders on Saturday came back eager to see them do the same to Yale and thus win the American championship. It was the unanimous opinion that Varsity could put it all over Yale, half American and half Canadian rules, and a meeting between these two colleges would do a great deal for international college athletics and afford an opportunity of comparing the respective merits of two systems.

When spoken to this afternoon Mr. Jim Craig, ex-captain of the Montreal team, said, "I didn't see Varsity play on Saturday, but I saw them play McGill two weeks ago and I know how Ottawa plays ball. I saw Yale play three years ago and I'm satisfied that a team like Varsity could swamp Yale. Our Canadian backs are faster and with that back division of Varsity's they would simply demoralise the Americans. They are faster, and those long passes and their sure kicking, and coaching would simply paralyse Yale. I consider Varsity's backs the best aggregation that has been together in years. The only thing the Canadians would have to fear would be the interference, but, on the whole, I consider it easier for Canadians to get on to the American game than for Americans to get on to ours. I'm sure Varsity would pile up a big score in their half and win out by a high margin."

Another prominent football enthusiastic who have seen both teams in action expressed themselves as confident of Varsity's superiority. The only objection to the game was the fact that the season was late and a meeting could not be arranged for. On the other hand, it was pointed out that Varsity could go to Yale on Saturday, December 4, and play Parkdale on the 11th. It is felt here that if prompt action is taken by the Toronto papers and Varsity authorities that the game could be arranged for Saturday, December 4 or December 11 at the latest. "Such a game would do a great deal to advertise the sterling athletic types found in Canadian colleges and with such a team as Varsity has it seems too bad not to let them show what they can do," said a local man who has been identified with the game for many years.

ROUGH RIDERS WOULD GO

Ottawa, Nov. 29.—(Special)—The Ottawa Fotball Club to-night announced the willingness to play an exhibition game with Varsity or Tiger teams at Philadelphia. All the players are in good shape with the exception of Kilt, and would welcome a trip to the Quaker City, believing themselves capable of beating Tigers on any field and of doing much better against Varsity than they did in last Saturday's match.

* * *

HAMILTON TIGERS WILLING

Hamilton, Nov. 29.—(Special)—The proposal that the Tigers and Varsity go to one of the large United States cities, preferably Philadelphia, to demonstrate Canadian Rugby has met with great favour here and the Tigers this morning decided to go to Philadelphia next Saturday if Varsity would consent to play there. The management will make this request to-day and look for Varsity's consent.

HOCKEY

A special meeting of the P.A.C. is called for in the club rooms to-night at 7.30 to arrange for a hockey team for the coming winter. All young men interested are cordially invited.

A TRIP TO ALASKA

A trip to Alaska is one seldom undertaken by people in the ritish Isles, and of the many Bookings undertaken by the Grand Trunk Railway officials in London, few tickets show the destination to be that part north of Canada, where coal and gold, together with meteorological observations, are often supposed to be the chief reason for the existence of that land. That such a trip can be made with little out of the ordinary fatigue of travelling is well proved by a recent communication sent to Mr. Fred C. Salter, European Traffic Manager of the Grand Trunk Railway ,from Mr. Bromley Challenor, F.R.G.S., who has just returned from the north-western limit of the North American continent. The letter has an added interest by reason of the fact that on the day of the official opening of the Grand Trunk Railway's new offices at 17-19 Cockspur Street, S. W., Mr. Challenor was the first person to book a passage with the company for Canada. On Dominion Day (July 1st) the trip was planned and provision made for the journey, and, in the first week in October, back in England again, the well known geographer has been pleased to write to the Grand Trunk offices expressing his entire satisfaction with the easy way in which the trip was accomplished. After thanking the railway officials for making his means of transportation pleasant and comfortable, he says: "I was very much pleased, indeed, with both the road and rolling stock of your company, and in my opinion it is second to none on the continent of America. The arrangements you made for me very much added to my comfort and enabled me to reach my destination in the quickest possible time, and I must say I experienced the greatest civility from the company's staff during my passage on your road. The route you worked out for me was a most interesting one, and coming back as I did over the Rockies and the Great Lakes, I did not travel over a single mile a second time except the short run between Sarnia and Toronto. Will you be good enough to send me particulars of your 'Round the World Tours.' I am thinking that next spring I may have another run out to the West, and if I do I should like to return home via the East." Thus the whole of Great Britain is quickly put in touch by this great railway system, with what frequently is said to be the uttermost parts of the earth.—Dublin (Ireland) Daily Express, Oct. 19, 1909.

BUDGET IS REJECTED

Archbishop of York Speaks Against Lansdowne's Amendment — Move of Peers Is Unprecedented For Three Hundred Years—Absence of Excitement Marks the Event—Cabinet Met This Morning.

London, Dec. 1.—In direct disregard of the advice of some of its ablest and oldest members, such as Lords Rosebery, Morley, Cromer, Courtney, James of Hereford, Balfour of Burleigh, the Earl of Lytton and the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, the House of Lords yesterday created a situation unprecedented in English history, at least in three hundred years, by refusing formal assent to the budget bill, and referring it to the country itself for judgment, thereby, in theory, making it illegal to collect taxes and carry on the King's Government.

The vote, taken close to midnight, was on Lord Lansdowne's amendment that the House was not justified in giving its consent to the budget bill until it had been submitted to the judgment of the country. It resulted: For the amendment 350, against 75. There was no excitement.

The following abstained from voting: The Duke of Connaught, the Archbishop of Cantesbury, Viscount St. Oldwyn, Earl de la Warr, the Earl of Lytton and the Marquis of Dufferin and several other peers and bishops. The Archbishop of York and the Bishops of Birmingham, Chester and St. Asaph voted against the resolution. The Bishop of Lincoln voted for the resolution, while Lord James of Hereford and the Bishop of Hereford paired against the resolution. Otherwise the division was on strict party lines.

The Earl of Crewe, Secretary of State for the Colonies, and Lord Privy Seal, closed the debate in a speech frequently interrupted by Ministerial cheers.

Lord Lansdowne's amendment, he contended, was the negation of all precedent and flouted all usages. All agreed that it was necessary this year to raise a large amount of extra money by taxation, necessitated by the claims of national defence and the adoption of old-age pensions.

The sum total of the long debate, he declared, was that the Opposition considered the Government's method of raising money as illusory, and that that justified revolution.

The final day's debate was again distinguished by oratorical excellence, particularly by Lord Curzon of Keddleston, former Viceroy of India, and the Archbishop of York. The archbishop's speech was his maiden effort in the House of Lords, and its eloquent periods, added to by Dr. Lang's fine presence and resonant voice, made a deep impression.

The archbishop strongly arraigned Lord Lansdowne's resolution, declaring that it would be unprecedented for the Lords to reject a finance bill passed by the House of Commons with such a majority.

The House cleared for division at 11.30 p.m.

The scene was impressive, but in no sense exciting, except that the House was packed to its utmost capacity and a great array of numbers of peers who only appear in the House in most exceptional cases.

None would have supposed that the event proceeding was destined, not only to prove memorable in the annals of British history, but possibly also involving far-reaching charges in the British constitution.

There certainly was unusual animation in the public galleries, which were crowded with peeresses, members of the House of Commons, ambassadors and others, but in the House itself complete calm prevailed. There was none of that tense excitement or exuberant enthusiasm so distinctive of a similar occasion in the lower House.

Nearly fifteen minutes were occupied in clearing the House.

The Prime Minister, Mr. Asquith, called another meeting of the Cabinet for ten o'clock this morning to complete formalities, folowing the action of the House of Lords, and it is practically certain that Parliament will be prorogued on Friday until the middle of January.

It is also stated, with an air of authority, that yesterday's council decided upon measures ensuring the uninterrupted collection of taxes on tea, spirits and tobacco, until the new Parliament is able to pass a retrospective act, regularizing the situation.

The Premier went to Sandringham to see the King after the council to-day.

As the new taxes are all rejected, the treasury, in the words of Lord Welby, a leading authority on the subject, can only look to the taxation in force on 31st March last, but of this the income tax expired on April 5, leaving only about $5,000,000 arrears recoverable from the preceding year. This means a loss of revenue of over $140,000,000. Further, the tea duty expired on June 30, involving a provable loss of $20,000,000. These sums together with the estimated difference between the revenue and expenditure of the current year based on last year's taxation makes up a deficit of well on to $250,000,000 for which provision must be made.

The income tax and tea duties collected since the resolution affecting them passed the House of Commons according to the usual practice will now be repayable to the taxpayer and many suits for that purpose have been reported in preparation in anticipation of the rejection of the bill.

Whenever the session closes, neither income tax nor tea duty can be levied—in the latter case a serious matter for merchants with large stocks on hand. To meet these difficulties alternative methods have been proposed. The House of Commons might be invited to pass a budget which the Lords would approve, in which case the deficit in round figures would be $85,000,000. This, however, means submission to the peers, a humiliation scarcely conceivable. The other course suggested is for the House of Commons to pass a resolution authorizing the continued levying of the new taxes and duties pending the general election. But this might meet with objection as conferring no legal warrant.

If declarations made by responsible members of the Government are to be taken at their face value, no compromise of any kind will be accepted by the Cabinet. These were, however, qualified by the remark that the interests of the nation must be remembered. This was no doubt within the purview of the Opposition leaders when they resolved upon their revolutionary action. But it will be a task of exceptional difficulty to devise a means of safeguarding the national interests that will provide a way of minimizing the financial confusion and yet maintaining the absolute control over the country's taxation and expenditure assented on behalf of the House of Commons. The late Lord Salisbury warned the House of Lords fifteen years ago that to fight a budget must cause the greatest inconvenience in dealing with the public finances. That prudent counsel the peers have ignored in order to preserve their lands from being taxed on its proper value.

Painless Surgery.

New York, Dec. 1.—Painless surgery, anaesthesia without after effects is the discovery which Dr. Jonnesco dean of the medical board of the University of Bucharest, who arrived yesterday on the Kronprinzessin Cecelie, has come to America to demonstrate.

Stovaine is a drug already known to the medical world, but by combining it with strychnine and distilled water, and injecting it into the spinal cord, the doctor has been able to produce complete insensibility to pain without loss of consciousness, nausea headache, disturbance of the heart action, and other unpleasant effects of ether and chloroform.

In one case a boy with bandaged eyes, on whose brain the surgeon was at work, asked him when the operation was to begin, and then walked to his cot after it was over.

Specialists at Paris and London where Dr. Jonnesco has conducted clinics, do not all agree that the new anaesthetic is safe in general surgery.

Wrecking Tug Burned.

Detroit, Dec. 1.—The big wrecking tug Ottawa, owned by the Reid Wrecking Co., was burned to the water's edge at Red Cliff Bay, Wis. The Ottawa had just succeeded in releasing the big steamer Hoyt, abandoned to the underwriters. The crew were forced to flee for their lives.

The loss is $60,000, partly covered by insurance.

TRADE PACT WITH FRANCE

Several of Them Led by Armstrong of East Lambton Desert Party and Declare That It Is a Useless Treaty Sir Wilfrid Laurier Shows That France Is a Heavy Importer of Canadian Products.

Ottawa, Dec. 1.—After a lengthy debate extending until 11 o'clock the first and second readings of the Government's bill to bring into force the Franco-Canadian trade treaty were given last night. The measure passed through committee in quick order, and now stands for a third reading.

The interesting feature is the split in the ranks of the Opposition. Whereas five fought the treaty last time there are thirty-three now.

The chief argument against it was that it did no good to the farmers of the country, and was a useless measure which might have the evil effect of injuring our trade relations with other countries without being of any benefit itself.

All the Liberals voted for the treaty and so did the following Conservatives: Borden, Boyce, Daniel, Doherty, Foster, Jamieson, Meighen, Monk, Nantele, Oaler, Paquette, Roche, Taylor (Leeds), Taylor (New Westminster), Turcott (Nicolet).

In moving the second reading, Hon. Mr. Fielding said that the opposition to the treaty in the French Senate had come from a number of prominent people interested in agriculture, who saw in the cattle schedules a menace. Canada had not been doing much in the way of exporting beef to France and would not likely do much in the way of shipping fat cattle, and it was agreed to qualify the treaty by adding the words "to the exclusion of fat cattle ready for the butcher." The method of determining the line of demarcation of the admission of cattle, it was decided to leave to the French authorities, Canada reserving the right to protest if necessary.

R. L. Borden quite agreed with Mr. Fielding that the amendments to the treaty were not important, but his reasons for taking the same view were probably different. He had very grave doubts as to whether the treaty would have any great effect on the trade between Canada and France. The treaty made by the Conservative Government had not been attended by very satisfactory results. Under the maximum French tariff, the duty on an animal weighing 2,000 pounds imported into France would be $54, and under the minimum tariff $36, and that Canada need not look to the development of a beef export trade to France. The agricultural schedules also would be of no benefit to this country.

As the treaty was subject to cancellation on a year's notice, he would not oppose ratification.

J. E. Armstrong (East Lambton) described the French tariff as of very little good to agriculturists. The time had come to take into consideration our relations with Germany, which was importing one billion dollars' worth of food products, three hundred millions of which were just what Canada is growing. France was self-supporting so far as food products were concerned. We should cultivate German trade instead. The Argentine Republic sent over one hundred millions of food products to Germany, whereas Canada would only send this year three hundred thousand.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier quoted from trade statistics to show that France imports annually wheat to the value of 186,000,000 francs, lumber of various kinds to the value of over 200,000,000 francs, cheese value at 40,000,000 francs, and many articles in similar proportion. These figures were the real factor which had induced the Government to endeavor to try and find a market in France for Canadian goods.

Touching on the demand from the Opposition benches for negotiations with Germany, Sir Wilfrid said that our relations with that country were not what they ought to be, but it was not Canada's fault. The Government would be prepared as soon as this treaty is disposed of, to negotiate with Germany. Canada, Sir Wilfrid said, had opened wide the door of trade to the Mother Country, in the hope that some day we would get a preference in the British market. It was the policy of the Government to improve trade relations in all parts of the world, and this could be done without interfering in any way with the imperial preference.

Coal Prices Vary.

Halifax, N.S., Dec. 1.—The coal conspiracy case came up in court again yesterday. A new witness was Reid Wilson of Montreal, director of the Dominion Coal Co. He was examined in regard to prices paid by consumers at Montreal. He said prices varied according to quantities taken. The C.P.R. and G.T.R., taking about 300,000 tons each, would pay $2.90 cash for run of mine, while a man taking 5,000 tons would be charged $3.75, and a man taking up to 500 tons would be asked $4.25. The householder buys very little of Dominion Coal Co.'s coal, hard coal being used in the houses as a rule.

Held For Enquiry.

Windsor, Dec. 1.—Sam Spencer, alias Wilson, arrested in Detroit, and thought to have been implicated in the express robbery at Niagara Falls, was brought to Windsor last night and will be held for violating his parole until complete investigation is made regarding the robbery. It is not thought he was connected with the affair, however. Spencer wants the officers to release him on his promise that he would forsake the North American continent.

2,500 Switchmen on Strike.

St. Paul, Minn., Dec. 1.—After fifteen days' negotiation between the Switchmen's Union of North America and the joint committee of railroad managers, representing 13 roads of the Northwest, a strike, involving 2,300 switchmen, became effective at six o'clock last night. The men demanded six cents more an hour and double pay for Sunday and overtime in excess of ten hours. The men were employed by the various railroads running west and north of St. Paul and Lake Superior to the Pacific coast.

The first effect of the strike was a sharp bulge in the price of wheat on the Chicago grain market yesterday. As the roads entering St. Paul, Duluth and Superior are largely grain carriers from the west, the prospect of interruption to this traffic caused some to fear delayed deliveries of grain.

Last night both sides to the dispute issued statements.

H. H. Strathy Dead.

Barrie, Dec. 1.—Henry Hatton Strathy, K.C., died early yesterday afternoon after a brief illness. Mr. Strathy was taken ill with low fever about three weeks ago and confined to the house. Nothing serious was anticipated until last Thursday. The best skilled medical aid was then brought from Toronto, but the fever overtaxed his heart, death being due to heart weakness. Mr. Strathy was in his 63rd year. The funeral takes place Thursday afternoon. He was associated with many philanthropic works, chiefly as president of the Children's Aid Society for the county and of the Royal Victoria Hospital.

54 Chambers Street — Behind Examiner Office

At Mrs. Blenkinsop's

By Peggy Wobling

Mrs. George Blenkinsop is most hospitable. All her friends say so. She also prides herself on originality, and lives in West Kensington.

There is an element of surprise about her parties. Willie Trevor says: "You never know what you're in for." Mr. Blenkinsop—good-natured, cheery little man—lives in the hope that his wife will be "amusin'."

Last year Mrs. Blenkinsop gave a suffrage tea. She delivered an address on the cause, and arranged a corner of the room to look like a cell in Holloway, having vainly tried to induce her husband to appear as a policeman.

Mrs. Blenkinsop's latest invitations had the single word "Rubaiyat" written in the left-hand corner of the card.

"What will it be like, m'dear?" asked Mr. Blenkinsop, apprehensively.

"Very strange and very beautiful, George!" answered his wife.

"And amusin'?"

"No—Persian!"

The spirit of old Omar of Naishapur has visited West Kensington. The Rubaiyat at-home is over.

Willie Trevor and the pretty Miss Copsley agreed that it was ripping. The visitors arrived punctually. Mrs. Blenkinsop, who is tall and wears eyeglasses, received them in an Anglo-Persian costume—Persian to the waist, British about the skirts—with silver filigree ornaments and high-heeled slippers.

She asked the young people, on entering the drawing room, to sit on the floor. Willie Trevor and Miss Copsley promptly took their cushions into a corner. Willie murmured that they didn't want to get in anybody's way.

There was a small platform, covered with a Turkish rug. Mrs. Blenkinsop mounted, and the audience clapped.

"I am going to read the Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam," she announced. "And I want you all to join with me in a spirit of revelry. We will drink together with the astronomer poet of Persia—George, dear, tell Amma to bring in the wine."

Her husband obeyed and the parlor maid appeared with a tray. There was claret cup and burgundy. The guests, who had become intensely solemn, allowed Mr. Blenkinsop to fill their goblets, with the exception of one woman, whose strict temperance principles obliged her to ask for lemonade.

Mrs. Blenkinsop then opened a handsomely bound edition of the Rubaiyat and put on her reading spectacles and a most becoming crown of artificial purple and white grapes.

"Have you heard Omar Khayyam before?" whispered Miss Copsley to Willie Trevor.

"No—have you?" answered Willie.

"Of course, heaps of good times! I do wish I had a copy of my own."

Willie made a mental note of the hint, and the Copsley girl innocently mentioned her favorite color in bookbinding.

"Listen, Willie!" she said. "You ought to make the most of your opportunities."

"May I?" queried Willie, and he smiled expressively into her eyes.

"How absurd you are!" she exclaimed, blushing for no accountable reason.

Come, fill the Cup, and in the Fire of Spring
The Winter Garment of Repentance fling!

At this point, Mrs. Blenkinsop, keeping her finger in the book, raised a glass of claret to her lips.

"Now, please!" she said with a smiling signal.

The guests obediently followed her example.

"Rather sour!" observed the lady who was a total abstainer to her neighbor, referring to the lemonade.

Mrs. Blenkinsop read on steadily and a feeling of gloom crept over the company. They fought against it valiantly. One young man, determined to "make the thing go," quaffed jocosely at the wrong time, was reproved by a severe frown from his hostess.

When she dashed in to the verse beginning, "And if the wine you drink the lips you press—" there was a little agitation over Mr. Blenkinsop trying to persuade his aunt to have her goblet replenished.

"Not on any account, George! I'll pretend!" said the aunt, amiably.

"The ruby vintage drink!" continued the fair reader.

The gloom intensified. The visitors with exemplary patience, sipped at the same second whenever Mrs. Blenkinsop gave the signal, like well-trained supers.

"I've enjoyed it awfully! It was jolly!" said Willie Trevor, jumping up to congratulate his hostess when the end came at last.

It was the truth. He had been whispering to Miss Copsley, to say nothing of holding her hand, from the first line to the last.

"The Greek classics will never be equaled," observed Mr. Blenkinsop's aunt, slightly confused between Homer and Omar.

"My little room has been turned into a Persian garden," said the gratified Mrs. Blenkinsop.

"Omar Khayyam in West Kensington!" exclaimed the temperance lady with enthusiasm, as she drained her lemonade to the dregs.

Mr. Blenkinsop slipped out of the room.

"It wasn't what I call amusin'!" he said to himself wearily, and went downstairs to get a whisky and soda.

Constipation.

No one need expect to be healthy if the bowels are allowed to become clogged up. A free motion of the bowels daily should be the rule with everyone who aspires to perfect health.

Costiveness or constipation clogs the bowels, chokes up the natural outlet of impure matter, and retains in the system the poisonous effete waste products of nature, causing bad blood, dyspepsia, headache, biliousness, foul humors, pimples, boils, blotches, piles, etc. Burdock Blood Bitters has built up an unrivalled reputation as a cure for constipation and all the diseases which arise from it.

Constipation Cured.

Mr. Burns Woodcock, Nashwaak Bridge, N.S., writes: "For over two years my wife was troubled with constipation. She tried several physicians, but could get no relief, but after taking three bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters she was completely cured and is to-day in good health. My wife and I cannot speak too highly of Burdock Blood Bitters."

The Longest Word.

What is believed to be the longest word to be found in any dictionary—one that leaves even German and Dutch hopelessly out of it—may be turned up in Liddell and Scott's lexicon by those who can read Greek characters. Those who cannot may be content to know that this word which begins "lepadotemachoselachogaleo," proceeds in like manner through 78 syllables, and counts 170 letters in all. Of course, no ancient Greek ever used such a word as this in ordinary conversation. It is a comic word invented by Aristophanes for rhythmical delivery in one of his plays and means a dish compounded of all sorts of fish, flesh, fowl and sauces, which are enumerated in the word. The most ingenious English translation of it yet suggested is—"hash."

Couldn't Place Horace.

"They say that Horace wrote his poems in praise of wine," the school teacher said to the Billville citizen.

"Who? Horace Greely? Never knowed he writ poetry."

"No, no—the other Horace, who comes from antiquity."

"Never hearn tell of him, n'er the place he come from; but it's my opinion, whoever he wus, that he had mighty little to do to be wastin' words on wine, when the country has more corn licker than it kin consume convenient; but, come ter think of it, the less said 'bout corn, new or old, in the north Georgy region, the better. The blamed ol' government is mighty watchful!"—Atlanta Constitution.

The Last Straw.

"Say, paw," queried small Tommy Toddles, "why do they always put in a scythe when they make a picture of Father Time?"

"It is intended to represent the shortness of life, my son," answered Toddles, Sr. "Time cuts people down, you know."

"But, paw," continued Tommy, "when Time shall be no mower, he'll drop his scythe, won't he?"

"Speaking of time, young man," said the father, "you go up and tell your mother it's time to put you to bed."

NO STEEL TIES FOR ACTOR.

Tragedian Comes Forward with Grievance for Which Real Sympathy Will Be Felt.

He had long hair and it was black, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer. His voice was heavy, so heavy that at times it rumbled.

"Have the common people any rights?" he asked.

"A few," the editor admitted.

"And the uncommon people—how about them?"

The editor adroitly parried the question.

"State your grievance," he said.

The stranger assumed an impressive pose.

"I am an actor," he announced, "and while I am a very busy man, I find time to read the daily journals. In your sheet this morning, sir, I noted the statement that certain railroads are to adopt electricity as a motive power. In this connection, they will use steel ties instead of wooden ones. These steel ties, I am informed, are apt to carry powerful electric currents. There are times, sir, when, through lack of financial appreciation, actors are forced to use the railroads—but not the cars. I am a tragedian, sir. I have played Hamlet and Lear. Do you think it right for soulless corporations to force a Hamlet or a Lear to dance a frantic masurka, as it were, from one electric-charged tie to another? Can these corporations do this unjust thing?"

"I'd like to see 'em try it," said the editor, as he turned back to his work.

MULES NOT HARD TO HANDLE.

Whole Secret is in Knowing How to Do it, According to Army Officer.

Horse and mule men at the stock yards stood in admiration the other afternoon while the soldiers of Battery A and B, Second United States artillery, loaded 13 cars of mules in 25 minutes. It was a new record on the loading docks, and it wasn't accomplished by any unusual methods either. Nor was the mule driver's vocabulary resorted to. How did they do it? The lieutenant simply called the roll and the mules responded to their names.

"Nigger," called an officer, and a little black gun mule ambled up.

"Now, Mollie, you're next; now Cyclone," and Cyclone came like a cyclone.

If a mule was refractory a few men in khaki took hold of him and pushed and shoved him into place.

"No wonder," said an envious mule driver, "they know their mules; they couldn't do them all that way."

"That so?" said a non-commissioned officer. "I guess we could. It's all in knowing how. You never want to flinch around a mule. Never look back when you leave him. After you know how, mules are easier to handle than horses."—Kansas City Times.

How the Baby Bird Flew.

J. M. Barrie has a little fable in one of his works about a baby lark asking its mother to teach it to fly. The mother thought hard about how she herself had learned to fly long ago last year, but all she could recall was that you suddenly do it.

"Wait till the sun comes out after the rain," she said, half remembering. The rain came and glued the bird's wings together.

"I shall never be able to fly nor to sing," it wailed. Then of a sudden it had to blink its eyes for a glorious light had spread over the world. The baby bird's breast swelled, it did not know why, and it fluttered from the ground, it did not know how. "The sun has come out after the rain," it trilled. "Thank you, sun, thank you," and it floated up crying: "Thank you."

USELESS LINIMENTS

Are being fast driven off the market by the overpowering merit of Nerviline, which has more strength in one drop than is found in a quart of ordinary remedies. Full of pain-subduing properties, healing and soothing, its influence on rheumatism, sciatica, and lumbago is unsurpassed. Nerviline is without question the best household liniment made. For nearly fifty years a staple in every drug store in America.

DROP ALL OTHERS.

"I dropped all liniments but Nerviline because I found Nerviline the quickest to relieve pain," writes E. S. Benton of St. John's. "If my children are croupy or sick, Nerviline cures them. If a case of cramps or stomach-ache turns up, Nerviline is ever ready. We use Nerviline for neuralgia, rheumatism, and all kinds of aches and pains; it's good as any doctor."

Use Only "Nerviline"

Good to rub on any part of the body—soothing, antiseptic, and just full of pain-relieving power. Just as good for internal pains, like cramps, toothache, dyspepsia, etc. You can't beat Nerviline as a general household panacea for the aches and pains of the whole family. Try it.

HER TALE OF WOE

"IF I were a benighted heathen," said the girl who likes to talk, "I know where I'd burn conciliatory incense. I would not scatter it about—I'd bunch it, pounds of it, and have a regular bonfire before the god of malign fate. Oh! there must be one, you know!

"Now, there was the other night when we were to meet Genevieve downtown for dinner. Genevieve is our dearest friend from out of town and is visiting in a north shore suburb. Her trip to Chicago was mainly to shop. From her first waking moment to the instant when she closed her eyes at night she was going to do nothing but tear madly about from store to store, buying, matching, comparing, ordering, charging and sending home. She was to have no thought of anything else. This she had beaten in upon our brains through letters and telephone messages. Even taking time to dine with us downtown was for her a great concession.

"I found my sister the afternoon of the dinner, regretfully putting aside her new hand-embroidered shantung frock that I knew she was absolutely dying to wear somewhere. Also she replaced her hat with the willow plumes amid its tussue paper wrappings and resolutely kept her eyes away from the fluffy evening wrap.

"'We can't wear 'em,' she told me dolefully, though firmly. How she knew I had been holding similar rites over my pink broadcloth and rose hat I don't know. 'We can't wear 'em! Genevieve will have been shopping all day of course, and be in her street clothes and we don't want to make her feel uncomfortable. It wouldn't do!'

"'No!' I agreed, sadly, 'it wouldn't. Isn't it a shame? I suppose it means tailor suits!'

"'Yes,' said my sister with the light of martyrdom in her eyes. 'And not even lace waists. No human being can wear a lace waist to shop in, so Genevieve probably will have on just a tailored one. I shall wear my plainest wash waist and you do the same and of course we'll wear our street hats.'

"So we robed ourselves for the sacrifice. It was a real sacrifice, because if there is anything which is a joy on earth to me it is to get into my best clothes and dine downtown in a fashionable restaurant and know I look as well as the rest of 'em!

"'Maybe,' my sister said as we slunk into the most exclusive cafe in town where Genevieve and my sister's husband and his brother were to join us severally, 'maybe strangers seeing us will think we've just got into town from off the train and of course our trunks haven't come. We've got to trust to luck that we don't run across anybody we know! Horrors! There are the Plankingtons and that's a real lace frock or I'll eat my hat! I'd like to, anyhow! Hide behind this pillar!'

"We did so, occupying the idle moments in dusting soot from each other's noses. You see, being in shopping garb, we didn't have any excuse for ordering a taxicab to bring us down and had taken the train from Hyde Park. The lake wind besides peppering us with soot had blown our hair endwise. We weren't happy. Far from it.

"The two men arrived next. Of course, they weren't in evening clothes either, in concession to the spirit of the occasion.

"While we sat surveying one another grumpily we saw a huge touring car spin up to the entrance and a French fashion plate descend therefrom. Oh, it is Genevieve, of course. She had dutifully gone out to the north shore suburb after her shopping to prepare for the gala occasion! Maybe the prince of India's wife or daughter might have rivaled her, but I doubt it.

"From the point of view of an accent nonparticipant in the occasion Genevieve was a lifetime's expensive dream, but from the infinitesimal spot on earth which my sister and I occupied at that instant she was a finger of scorn pointed at our cowering, tailor-garbed forms; The men—oh, what do men care whether they have on low-cut waistcoats or not? They just beamed on Genevieve and forgot themselves.

"I must say that Genevieve behaved beautifully to us. Everybody in the cafe looked at her so intently that I don't think anybody noticed us. Probably the general impression was that we were her maids or secretaries.

"That isn't all. What do you suppose those benighted men had done? Something had been said about going to a vaudeville after dinner. That gave the god of malign fate another chance to get in his work!

"I suppose," said the girl, gloomily, "that if we had togged ourselves out as we wanted to Genevieve would have met us in a raincoat, a bicycle cap and an injured expression! That's why I say if I were a heathen I'd buy the most efficient incense burner I could find and keep it working over [illegible] Chicago Daily News.

The KITCHEN CABINET

THE LAST BITE.

ALL through my life I've wondered why,
With every treat I've had,
I find, though all the rest be good,
The last bite is so bad!

Perhaps I'd saved the largest grape?
Alas, my plan is foiled,
I'd kept it for the farewell taste,
To find—that last grape spoiled!

An extra cake, a sugar loaf,
Shaped like an Easter bonnet,
Is good—all but the wind-up bite,
That has no sugar on it.

And so it goes, through everything,
We hoard until the last,
Only to find enjoyment,
So long deferred, is past.

Just live from day to day—that is
The moral of my tale,
Lest, like the last bad grape, we find
Life's sweetness dry and stale.

Tests for Eggs.

A good egg will sink in water; it will also adhere to the shell when boiled.

A rough surface, with particles of lime sticking thereto, is an evidence of freshness.

When eggs are boiled about three minutes, a good medium length of time, the shell will dry at once when taken from the water.

Distrust the egg with smooth, glassy shell.

Figs with Wine.

This sounds Sybaritic, but there is really no simple way to cook figs and make them palatable—and the addition of wine is not so elaborate as it sounds. It requires very little; cover with a cheap cooking claret, and let stand over night. Cook slowly in a double boiler. When the figs are soft, take out of the liquid, allowing it to boil down. Then sweeten and pour over the fruit. This is strengthening, and cathartic in tendency.

Uses for Cold Coffee.

A good pudding is made of cornstarch flavored with coffee instead of chocolate. Mold and serve with cream.

When milk is scarce, use cold coffee in gingerbread and different kinds of brown puddings.

Now that the creamy tints of lace are so fashionable, the lace may be dyed with left-over coffee. Heat strain two or three times and use strong or weak as the depth of color is desired.

Not a Lady Killer.

"They tell me, Mr. Slathers," simpered the fluffy young thing, "that you are quite a lady killer."

"They do me an injustice, upon my word, Miss Giggles," responded the gallant old beau, laying his hand on his heart and making a profound bow, "I catch 'em alive."

Costive Dyspeptic, Bilious

Strong purgatives have killed many a good man. Costiveness is bad—violent cathartics are worse. If bothered with stomach trouble or biliousness, try Dr. Hamilton's Pills. They are so mild you can scarcely feel their action, yet so effective that the entire system is cleansed of wastes.

JUST TRY
Dr. Hamilton's Pills

Dr. Hamilton's Pills move the bowels gently, they tone the kidneys, assist digestion, clear the skin. For those subject to colds, biliousness, languor, there is no better medicine. Try a 25c box of Dr. Hamilton's Pills.

The KITCHEN CABINET

"IN HIS BONES."

WE ALL have met the grumbler; he
Who says: "Good-morning, Jones,
It's going to be a wretched day;
I feel it in my bones."

And then he scrutinizes you,
And with oppressive groans
Says: "You're in for a sick spell; I
Can feel it in my bones."

And thus the doom-dyed pessimist,
"This land of ours will go
To the damnition bow-wows, straight.
My old bones tell me so."

Now bones, as everybody knows,
Are very highly rated,
And personally, I'd regret
If mine disintegrated.

But he or she whose every bone,
From skull to sesamoid,
Has that old trick of "feeling things,"
I always shall avoid.

Timely Tips.

Stale cake has many uses; in Charlotte Russe, with jelly on top for the children—many ways it can disphaed of. But for a change, it is a good plan to mix it with the new cake batter. Run the old pieces through the chopper, and then, before adding the flour to the new batter, stir in the crumbs, letting it stand until well soaked. This will require the addition of much less flour and sugar, to the new cake.

Salmon Salad is much improved by the addition of a garnish of capers. Instead of slices of lemon, use lemon juice in the dressing and the capers as garnish.

Spare Ribs is a dish not to be despised if carefully prepared. Bake them with a stuffing of apples, raisins and currants, and cover with sweet potatoes.

What is Saccharin?

A chemical substance used in place of ordinary sugar for sweetening purposes. It can be purchased at any drug store, and is very superior in strength to sugar. Twenty-six grains of saccharin will equal in sweetening power one pound of sugar. Therefore it must be used sparingly and with care. It must also be thoroughly dissolved or there will be tiny atoms of nauseating sweetness through the dish.

The English use saccharin in the preparation of marmalade. They often add gelatine to give the necessary "body" to the preserve.

Olive Barton Strothers

Ability Appreciated.

Sir Charles Wyndham (speaking at a dinner) told of a young man he once heard of who was paying attention to a lady to the great disgust of her father, who remonstrated very kindly with him. The father said: "If I see you in this house again I shall kick you out." The young man came back the very next day. "I told you what would happen," said the father, and it did happen. The young man did not appear for about five weeks, and then one day the father saw him coming toward the house, and immediately went and opened the front door. "Haven't you had enough?" said the old man. "Have you come again to see my daughter?" "No, no," replied the other, "I have come on behalf of the president of our football club."

Following Illustrious Example.

An art student in Berlin wrote recently to a brewing concern in Bohemia, offering to paint for the brewers "pictures suitable for advertising purposes—artistic, appropriate, attractive and cheap." He goes on to say: "Sir John Millais was not above taking 40,000 marks from a soapmaker for one of his paintings, to be used as an advertisement. Nor did he hesitate to offer other pictures for the same purpose at the same price. Why should not I, who owe my tailor, and who fear to look my landlady in the face, not do the same? Stay! I shall do better. Am willing to take less than 40,000 marks for my best work."

Had Weak Back.
Would Often Lie in Bed for Days Scarcely Able to Turn Herself.

Weak back comes from the kidneys, and when the kidneys are out of order the whole system becomes deranged. Those who have never been troubled with kidney trouble do not know of the suffering and misery which those afflicted undergo.

They begin by heping the kidneys to flush of all the acrid and poisonous impurities which have collected, thus clearing out the kidneys, bladder and all the urinary passages and carrying away the uric acid, the chief cause of rheumatism, from the blood.

Mrs. Arch. Schnare, Black Point, N.B., writes:—"For years I was troubled with weak back. Oftentimes I have lain in bed for days, being scarcely able to turn myself, and I have also been a great sufferer while trying to perform my household duties. I had doctors attending me without avail and tried liniments and plasters, but nothing seemed to do me any good. I was about to give up in despair when my husband induced me to try Doan's Kidney Pills, and after using two boxes I am now well and able to do my work. I am positive Doan's Kidney Pills are all that you claim for them, and I would advise all kidney sufferers to give them a fair trial."

Leaves No Streaks

With ordinary soap you wash—then spend nine-tenths of your time rubbing and polishing—that is if you are extra particular and can take the time.

When you wash your windows, for instance, little streaks of "dirt" seem so hard to get off—it's really the soap—not the dirt—that's the trouble. With Taylor's Borax Soap you wash and rinse, dry once and your glassware sparkles like crystal.

It's all in the borax—the way Taylor blends it in

Taylor's Borax Soap

The soap removes the grease—the borax removes the soap—and there you are!

It's fine for woolens, too. It positively will not shrink them. It brings them out of the wash as soft and fresh as new. Thousands of Canadian women are using Taylor's Borax Soap today. Try a cake at once and know the reasons why.

STUDYING THE SCIENCE OF HAPPINESS

Club Emblem

NEW YORK, Saturday.

Is business bad? Have you lost your dearest friend? Has the cook given warning? Does the baby cry all night? Are you getting old, or are you hopelessly young—are you battling with a discontent that makes trifling ills seem monumental and monumental ones insurmountable? Do you care to learn how to banish irritation, to tread worry under feet, to get up in the morning with a smile that won't come off, but is guaranteed to last until bedtime—do you want to be happy? Then join the Harmony Club.

The Harmony Club is not a visionary idea. It is a genuine, bona fide institution, incorporated as a social club under the laws of the State of New York. It has 2,500 members. It has a central office on the fourteenth floor of No. 30 Church street, in this city. Its Advisory Board includes men as prominent as John H. Cahill, vice president New York Telephone Company; Dr. William G. Schauffler, of Lakewood, N. J., Gerrit Society of New York city; Eustace Miles and Dr. A. Rabagliati, of England.

Its membership extends throughout the United States, England, China, India and New Zealand. It maintains a monthly magazine known as The Centre. It is a living vital organization, composed of people who believe happiness is to be found and who are bound together to make a scientific study of the way to find it.

The Harmony Club is not yet six months old. Happiness is an elusive quarry. The human race has been pursuing her as individuals since their dismissal from the Garden of Eden, but not until this year, 1909, did it occur to any one that the prospect of capture might be greater if mankind joined hands and entered the chase in a body.

June is the month of roses and inspiration. It was on a night last June that Edward H. Fallows, founder of the Harmony Club, conceived the idea of binding together those seekers after happiness, willing, unashamed, to avow their purpose. Edward H. Fallows is not a poet nor a mystic nor any of the things that might be imputed to a man who would harbor so chimerical an idea. He is a practical, bustling, energetic business man, a lawyer, with offices at No. 30 Church street. In addition to that he holds the office of Collector of Transfer Taxes for the State of New York, an important and disagreeable office, the second largest source of revenue for the State.

It's a Logical Outcome.

Without the intention of detracting at all from the inspiration of June nights, it must be confessed that the idea of the Harmony club was the logical outcome of a series of preceding events. The father of Edward H. Fallows, Bishop Samuel Fallows, of Chicago, has for some years been a prominent figure in the Emanuel movement. The flood of inquiries pouring in upon the Bishop with every mail threatened to overwhelm him. Although the Emanuel movement is a movement designed mainly to heal bodily ills, the letters received asked for advice regarding mental ills and worries. It was manifestly impossible for Bishop Fallows to adequately treat every case thus brought to his notice.

EDWARD H. FALLOWS
Founder of the Harmony Club

It was his distress at being unable to cope with this emergency that set his son to thinking and he finally evolved the idea of the Harmony Club. But Mr. Fallows is essentially a practical man. Distrusting the glamour of a June night, he sent for his little daughter.

"Annette," he said, "how would you like to join a happy club?"

Annette is also practical.

"What will it do for me and what will it cost?" she asked.

And then Mr. Fallows explained, adding that the cost probably would be about twenty-five cents a year. Now as Annette is still a little girl, her allowance is not large and she stood still and considered. Then she looked up and said decidedly:—"I'll join."

And with Annette as its first member Mr. Fallows wired his father that the Harmony Club had started.

"To harmonize people with themselves, their surroundings and each other; to prove the efficient value of a smile and song in everyday life; to establish the perfect unity of body, mind, heart and spirit; to investigate, formulate and demonstrate the scientific laws of happiness; to enunciate the principles of wholesome, triumphant, sincere living; to present the discoveries of modern psychology in simple, attractive guise; to put those who want vital knowledge in touch with those who have it; to maintain a brotherhood of individuals, where sympathy is the only bond; to impart the secrets of self-help as the highest form of altruism; to promote free discussion of every subject that makes for clear understanding of life"—are the objects of the club, as stated in its charter. Some of its philosophical tenets read thus:—

Centre Philosophies.

Only error frowns.

Laugh long, live long.

There is no fatality but fear.

The minds of men want not to be led, but only to be awakened.

Think not as I think; ask me not to think as you think; but let each think for himself till the thinking plane is passed and identity come through feeling.

Foregone conclusions are the jumping off places of progress.

What we boast of most is always our greatest weakness, and what we deplore as weakness be comes our greatest strength.

Spirituality is but vitality crowned with a consciousness.

The world's greatest crime is its toleration of falsity, because out of falsity, whether conscious or unconscious, all crime springs.

Theories are impressive luggage until life overtakes you; then you must strip for the race or be outrun.

The happiest family I know consists of three members. Father's name is Will, mother's name is Worship, and Work is their only child.

We get in this world not just what we want, but just what we are willing to pay for.

The things that bereave us only give us back our soul.

Whom we know we trust.

Scars are the trophies of the soul.

Infinite achieving grows from infinite believing.

Desire is the engine of destiny, but the engineer is Prayer.

To the idler clay is refuse; to the potter clay is opportunity.

It is better to act with ignorance than to talk with impotence.

The man who both wins the world's respect and keeps his own has learned how to walk over people without walking on them.

We exist on earth, but we live in a world that we ourselves people with our inmost thoughts.

The end of development is to become wholly fine, but not a whit feeble.

A shield and sword wherewith to conquer fate are a laugh and a longing. Fate is your master so long as fate can embitter you; fate is your slave from the moment you smile and determine.

Questions and Suggestions.

"The happiest hour in my day," says Mr. Fallows, "is the hour with my mail in the morning. I will not let any one else open it."

The letters received by Mr. Fallows constitute a really remarkable collection.

"I should like to develop my latent psychic powers," writes a woman from Chatham, N. Y.

"How is a woman going to be happy when her husband drinks?" demands an unhappy wife in Connecticut.

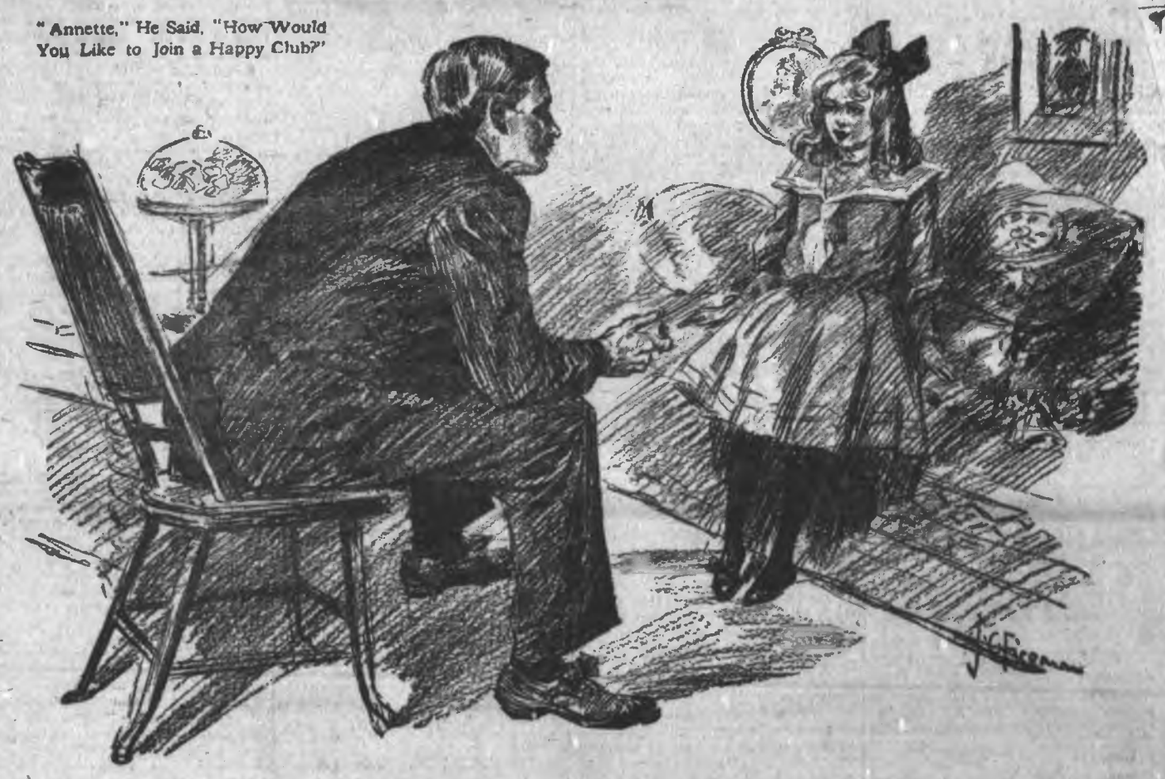
"How can I drive out fear?" is a query from Texas.

"I am glad to say that I am learning to live many of the doctrines," writes a member from New Jersey.

"I am beginning to be happy, because I am beginning to see good"—— This from Illinois.

The young woman who, when she applied for admission to the club, was a confessed pessimist, a hysterical, nervous, morbid individual, confesses to a conversion which has enlisted her whole family as members.

"Annette," He Said, "How Would You Like to Join a Happy Club?"



BISHOP SAMUEL FALLOWS.

Success is nothing more than seeing principles to the exclusion of objects.

He empowers me most who tells me I cannot. For then I know I will, if but to prove him wrong.

"Struggling to keep body and soul together" is a delusion of the self-deceived. He struggles in whom body and soul are apart.

Efficiency, not effect, is the purport of desire. The joy is in the strengthening, and not in the securing. Grow able and you cease to want.

Those who envy power forget her lineage; power is the first born child of privation.

The greatest gain is the greatest loss turned to account.

"It's all in the attitude," she remarks.

Every letter is answered. If the unhappy inquirer gets nothing else from the reply, it is certain he gets sympathy and companionship, two very great factors toward the production of happiness itself.

The club purposes still greater work. Ere long it intends to open a school, to have a local centre both in this city and in Chicago, where lectures on the science of happiness will be given to regular classes. In addition to this a correspondence course will be opened, treating of the abstract qualities which tend to make for happiness in this world. The school is to be non-religious, non-partisan and to admit any race or creed.

TOO MUCH TELEPATHY FOR HIM.

"I DON'T take much stock in mental telepathy any more," said the red faced man. "I haven't thought much of it since I found out what it did for my wife's cousin Grace.

"Two years ago Grace became engaged to a young man named Skinner. Skinner was a Western man. I don't know to this day from what part of the West he hailed. In fact, none of Grace's family seemed to know much about him, but he was apparently a very decent sort of chap and the courtship proceeded without parental opposition. However, the young couple had a flare-up one day on their own account and the deal was declared off.

"Skinner went West again and Grace set about mending her shattered affections. But she didn't make a very good job of it. She had been really fond of the man, and although she didn't say much it was plain that she was pretty badly cut up over the situation. At first she sincerely repented of her own share in the unfortunate quarrel and gave way to a consuming desire to communicate with Skinner. But again she was handicapped by ignorance of his whereabouts. In his hurry to escape from painful surroundings Skinner had inconsiderately neglected to pass around cards notifying friends of his future address, so no matter how penitent Grace might be she was deprived of the opportunity to acknowledge her slus at first hand. Of all Skinner's acquaintances there was only one person, so far as Grace knew, who was at all likely to know where he had gone, and as that was a chap who had also been an ardent admirer of hers at one time she felt some hesitancy about making Skinner the subject of conversation.

"One day, however, when the young man called, she seemed positively obsessed with thoughts of Skinner. Try as she might to keep her wits together she scarcely could speak an intelligent sentence. Her whole mind was on Skinner, and no matter what the young man talked about Grace sat there saying over and over to herself:—

"'Oh, if I only dared ask him if he knows where Charley Skinner is!'

At last the young man started home. When he got to the door he stopped and said:—

"'Oh, by the way, I wonder what has become of Charley Skinner. I haven't given him a thought for some months until to-day. It has suddenly occurred to me that I'd like to know something about him. I believe I'll look him up.'

"Grace's head went around dangerously fast.

"'Can you find out anything about him?' she asked.

"'Yes,' said the young man, 'it is the easiest thing in the world. I know some folks down in Fulton street who will be sure to keep track of him. I'll see them to-morrow and learn something about him. I'd like to know, just out of curiosity.'

"The young man kept his word. He learned Skinner's address and Grace wrote to him and a month later Skinner was back in New York and the date for the wedding was set a second time. Up to that point the mental apparatus of all concerned had worked all right. It had been a clear case of thought transference, and if Grace only had refrained from too elaborate explanations the outcome of the telepathic correspondence would probably have been satisfactory. But no sooner did the young people get into their prematrimonial harness than they became reminiscent.

"'Weren't you ever coming back to me?' cooed Grace.

"'Never,' said Skinner. 'It was your fault I went away. By the way, you have never told me yet how you happened to find out where I was.'

"And then Grace, being filled with the enthusiasm common to recent psychic converts, related her experience with the obliging young man. She expected Skinner to be pleased at that exhibition of her hypnotic powers, but he wasn't.

"'Do you mean to tell me,' he said, 'that your two minds work in such accord that by just wishing you can make that fellow do whatever you want him to do?'

"'I did that time,' said Grace innocently.

"'Then,' said Skinner, 'he is the man for you instead of me. He is better suited to you than I am. You and I couldn't make our thoughts hit it off that well in a hundred years. We'd better quit before it is too late. I'm going West again.'

"And that time Skinner left for good. Last month Grace married the other young man, but my wife swears she isn't happy; so although Grace may have been able to work the telepathic wire without a hitch I can't see wherein she profited by it. Hence my contention that it isn't such a valuable science after all."

THE ECONOMY OF HOME MADE INK.

MR. HALPECK, of Harlem, is a natural born economist. He is always ready to save, no matter what it costs. Among his daily delights is violet ink and violet ink is expensive, even when confined in a fountain pen, where there is a minimum of evaporation. It appealed strongly, therefore, to him when a friend told him that he could have an entire quart of his favorite color at the nominal figure of ten cents if he would buy a package of dye for that amount and place it in a quart of boiling water according to directions on the package.

That night on the way home to his room in a flat there was joy in his heart and a package of dye in his pocket. From the landlady he borrowed a fruit jar, that being the nearest approach to a quart bottle the landlady possessed, and went with the dye and the jar into the bathroom. It was such a very simple matter, this making of a whole quart of fine violet ink for only ten cents, that Mr. Halpeck did not remove any portion of the nice new light gray fall suit which he had been wearing for two weeks. He was going out as soon as he had made the ink, so what was the use?

Whistling merrily at his work, he soon had the dye in the jar and the hot water spigot going rapidly into it. Next he put the top on the jar without observing that the rubber washer around its inner side were somewhat frayed and not as protective as they should be. He waited for a minute or two for the dye to mix thoroughly with the water, and to be sure that it would he took up the jar and began to shake it vigorously. But not for long. The defective rubber let the ink out in several streams and before Mr. Halpeck could let go his hold he had sprinkled his new suit with violet. It had gone over on the wall of the bathroom, also on the floor and on the bath rug and towels, and, worse still, it went into a large pan on the floor containing the landlady's finest shirt waist in soak—so fine, indeed, that she would not trust it to the laundry, but was washing it herself.

What Mr. Halpeck said is not a matter of record, but he said it loud enough to bring the landlady to the rescue, and when she looked in upon the purpled place she nearly went into spasms. Halpeck stood there with the jar in his hands, violet to the wrists and his face freckled with it. The landlady shrieked at him to put it out on the windowsill, where it would do no more harm. Mr. Halpeck obeyed. No sooner had the cold stone of the sill got into the hot of the jar than bang it went, and its violet contents streamed down the white wall of the area and into the open window of the janitor's best room, where it found such resting places as it could on the lace curtains, the Japanese rugs and anything else that happened to be in its way and was susceptible to violet dye. Then was a howl from below, and Mr. Halpeck dodged the landlady and fled out of the flat. But he was compelled to return. As a spectacle in violet he was liable to arrest by the very first policeman he met.

There was no way to square himself except by financial means, and Mr. Halpeck agreed to make good for all damages sustained. The bill, as itemized, was as follows:—One lady's shirt waist, $18; bath towels and rug, $2.50; damage to walls and floor, $3, estimated; lump sum to janitor's wife, $5, for rewhitening wall of areaway, $2; fruit jar, 10 cents; shirt, tie and collar, $1.65; cuffs, 25 cents; dyeing one suit of clothes properly and of a dark brown, $4.25. Total, $36.73, plus 10 cents paid for the package of dye that made all the trouble. At present Mr. Halpeck is using black ink, which he buys in a bottle ready made.

THE FICKLENESS OF LOVE

By Max Gordon

Marriage is supposed to be contracted for life and based upon love—sometimes.

Will this love last as long as life? Can it last so long? Are the husband and wife justified in swearing fidelity unto death? Are they not committing a foolhardy or inconsiderate action when they pledge themselves for the immutability of their transient sentiments?

The poets, who seem to have been trusted with the task of almost hopelessly trusted with the task of almost hopelessly confusing and mystifying this matter, do not hesitate an instant with the reply to my questions, They are firmly convinced that true love lasts for aye. If love ends it is not love they say.

That is very easily said, but how about the truth of it? Every one who has observed life with his eyes open can give the poets a hundred examples of love that commenced very passionately, and yet cooled off very rapidly and very thoroughly.

If the poets say that love which fades away in time is not love, we must ask them how are we to distinguish between real love and false love, as the latter at the moment of its conception, and also during its brief blossoming time, is so deceptively like the former, rousing the same sentiments, impelling to the same actions, with the same accompaniment of excitement and agitation, ecstasy and despair, tenderness and jealousy, as the former.

Certainly there have been cases in which love only ceased with life. A cool and impartial analyst would, perhaps, find even in these cases that the perpetuity of love could be ascribed to favourable circumstances; to the power of habit, the accidental absence of any disturbance or temptations—in short, to influences entirely independent of the two individuals—fully as much, at least, as to the quality of their sentiment.

We cannot deny the existence of such cases. Lifelong single matrimony in them is a true, natural and authorized condition. In them form and substance are one, and the outward visible bond never ceases to be the expression of the inward spiritual union.

But if such cases do exist, without any doubt they are, even according to the poet's own confessions, exceedingly rare.

In what way ought those persons to consider matrimony who believed that they loved sincerely at a certain moment, but found after months or years of reflection, or awoke suddenly to the consciousness upon meeting a certain individual, that their love was a mistake?

Ought they to hasten and unite themselves for life? They soon cease to love each other, and then the yoke of matrimony is as unbearable a burden as if it had been assumed without love in the first place.

Or ought they to wait, before marrying, to become convinced that their love will last till death? This would be somewhat difficult; for as the true nature of the sentiment can only be recognized afterward, the lovers would have to wait until their hour of death before they could say with a clear conscience:

"Our love was in truth the genuine; it lasted as long as life. We can now with good courage be—buried together, with no fear that we shall ever grow weary of each other."

If such a severe examination and overwhelming conviction were required as indispensable conditions to matrimony, humanity would see no more betrothed lovers.

AT THE THEATORIUMS

All three of the local theatoriums had new bills last night and were well patronized during the evening, the programme in each case being seemingly to the entire satisfaction of the audience.

At the Princess new pictures were supplemented by attractive specialties. Miss Beatrice Fairbanks, one of the most charming singers heard here in some time delighted the audience with two songs "My Little Kickipoo," and "Pony Boy." Miss Vera Brown made a big hit in her Spanish song, "Santiago Flynn," followed by an attractive dance and Miss Hallihan in the illustrated song "I Like You," was heartily applauded.

The Royal has a novel turn as a vaudeville feature in the appearance of Millar Brothers with their electrical novelty act something new in the line of specialties and a performance that aroused genuine admiration last night. The effects in which reproductions of famous paintings are converted into what are practically moving pictures in which all the original colours are preserved is most striking and the act is certainly new. The moving pictures include a film drama in which some of the most striking features of Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables" are introduced.

Miss Claire Bogardus, a dainty little singer and dancer made her first appearance in Peterborough at the Crystal last night and made a pronounced hit. Her singing of the favourite "Yip-I-Addy-I-Ay" was received with every mark of popular favour and her dancing was as good as anything in the line that has been seen here in a long time. She is well worth seeing. Th programme includes new motion pictures.

HASTINGS ITEMS

Hastings, Nov. 27.—A great amount of damage is reported by the heavy rain storm of last week. Telegraph and telephone connection was almost entirely cut off, while trees of every description were almost shorn of their boughs leaving them in a very dilapitated looking condition, while some of the country roads were almost blockaded by broken trees and limbs.

The friends here of Mrs. Doonan formerly of Hastings, but latterly of Huntsville, regret to learn of her demise and extend their sympathy to the breaved family.

The concert given in the town hall on Friday night, in aid of the Public Library, was fairly well patronized. The best local talent took part and the entertainment was well worth the money. The object was well deserving of public patronage.

Numbers of our citizens are daily observed standing on the bridge, watching with intense interest the work which is being done by the dredge "Little Lake," which is busily engaged in cleaning out the river bed. A number of the engineering staff are at work at Rice Lake, getting everything in readiness for a complete survey as soon as winter fairly sets in, and the Lake was frozen over.

Mr. J. Coughlan has disposed of his skating rink interest to Mr. J. Fitzgerald, who has commenced making preparations for a skating rink to be held in open air.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarry spent Sunday in Cobourg.

Mrs. Ames of Cordington, is a guest at the home of Mrs. J. Valleau.

Mr. Wesley Huycke has been visiting his mother, Mrs. A. Huycke.

On Friday evening last, a number of the friends and neighbours of Mr. and Mrs. J. Stewart gathered at their home in the form of a farewell before their departure for their new home in Toronto. During the course of the evening the assembly was called to order by Mr. D. Fife, when a suitable address was read by Mrs. Nelson Beavis, while Mr. N. Beavis presented Mr. Stewart with a handsome leather suit case, and Mrs. Stewart with a beautiful butter dish and knife, then, on behalf of the girl friends of Miss Bella Waddell. Miss Belle Fife presented her with a very choice gold pin set with amethysts. Mr. and Mrs. Stewart replied in feeling terms, after which all joined in singing "He's a Jolly Good Fellow." The ladies then served refreshments, and a most enjoyable time was spent by all present.

Mr. John Walsh has returned from a visit to his daughter, Mrs. Lee of Belleville.

Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Scriver, of Keene, have been visiting friends in town.

Despair and Despondency

No one but a woman can tell the story of the suffering, the despair, and the despondency endured by women who carry a daily burden of ill-health and pain because of disorders and derangements of the delicate and important organs that are distinctly feminine. The tortures so bravely endured completely upset the nerves if long continued.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a positive cure for weakness and disease of the feminine organism.

IT MAKES WEAK WOMEN STRONG, SICK WOMEN WELL.

It allays inflammation, heals ulceration and soothes pain. It tones and builds up the nerves. It fits for wifehood and motherhood. Honest medicine dealers sell it, and have nothing to urge upon you as "just as good." It is non-secret, non-alcoholic and has a record of forty years of cures. Ask Your Neighbors. They probably know of some of its many cures.

If you want a book that tells all about woman's diseases, and how to cure them at home, send 31 one-cent stamps to Dr. Pierce to pay cost of mailing only, and he will send you a free copy of his great thousand-page illustrated Common Sense Medical Adviser—revised, up-to-date edition, in paper covers. Is handsome cloth-binding, 50 stamps. Address Dr. R.V. Pierce, Buffalo, N.Y.

Why Woman's Part In The World Is All-Important

The unthinking may learn with surprise that politics, arts and sciences are not the most important things in the world.

All the vast forces of evolution and progress have but one aim, and that is the birth, the development and the ultimate perfection of the race. Other things are of value only in so far as they improve the material—the mental and the moral conditions under which the race lives.

Man and the baby who is to be father or mother to man are the be-all and the end-all of existence. Woman need not complain, then, that her part in life, that of evolving and of bringing into existence ever higher and nobler human types, is not sufficient important or interesting.

Nor should she allow herself to be deluded into supposing that any mere talent for 'ologies, for politics, or for other of life's lesser things, justifies her in expending upon the acquisition of such powers the forces she holds in trust for the race.

Without specialization, excellence is impossible. It is natural for man, unnatural for woman, to specialize. In order that the race shall not grow lopsided and ill-balanced, woman's range of faculties should be wider, but her talents less specialised.

Normally at the age which the girl is developed into a woman, nature, for racial purposes, locks up within the girl a portion of her physical and mental forces, with the result that the force thus invested for the race is not available for her to spend in other fields of effort. Her level of physical and intellectual attainment is, therefore, inferior to man's.

At the same time, however, because of this power invested in her, she becomes during her development into woman a more highly-evolved creature than man is, more beautiful, more graceful, more delicate and emotional; purer in aspiration and in act. The power locked up in her becomes unavailable for her to use as talents, but it reappears in the form of higher personal embellishment, in greater beauty and refinement of body and of mind.

This great physiological truth is at the present moment wholly overlooked. Instead of permitting the normal investment of capacity to take place during the years of development we violently prevent it by over straining and by over-training, muscularly and mentally, our growing girls in order to fit them to compete with men.

For this reason there is growing up among us a third sex—a race of charmless, strenuous, and for the most part, unhappy, neuter-persons, who possess neither the beautiful and invaluable faculties of women nor the fine capacities of men, but a spurious admixture, which nullifies both.

The spectacled, adenoid-afflicted, physically, mentally, and morally defective little creatures who form 85 per cent. of modern children are the offspring of such constitutionally bankrupt mothers, and should warn us whither the mistaken trend of the feminist movement is leading.

When we have learnt a little more of psychology we shall recognize this all-important fact, and we shall take steps either to prevent the wholesale cruel spoilage of women which results from our present mistaken aims and methods, or we shall take steps to prevent the wholesale degeneration of the race which results therefrom.

Though not excelling in the abstract sciences and arts, woman it is who has made—and will still further make—a fine art of life and of living, by her inestimable talent for transforming the few simple, often meagre properties of four walls, some chairs and tables into a haven of peace, of refinement, of affection, and of that higher inspiration which is the mainspring of progress.

Let men, then, keep their Empire-building and their 'ologies. Woman's province is more vital, Superior! Inferior? Shakespeare, with the finest brain the world has known, so recognized the beauty, the value and the living artistry of true womanhood that as Ruskin observes, he created no heroes—but only heroines.

SPORT FOR YOUNG AMERICA

By John O'Keefe.

Boy, the Spirit of Sport, is no felon in court; he is king of the body and brain.
Yet it seems that your dad hates the tumbles you've had; that he shudders at persons in pain.
From the grid to the links it is plain that he thinks you are either an Abel or Cain.
Boy, I'd like to get near your progenitor's ear and bore into his head with the truth
That a jaw rightly cracked is a glorious fact in the fame of American youth.
And a face in repair cannot rank anywhere with the mouth that is minus a tooth.
Boy, the black of your eye is an honour that's high, and the puff at the tip of your nose
Is a proof that, unfaking, you're good at the taking as well as the giving of blows.
Ask that frowning old dad if he knew as a lad the exalted enjoyment of those.
Mr. Man, which to you is the preferent view; Youthful Paul butt a human stone wall?
Slide to base on his face? Win a heartbreaking race? Drop another boy hard? Take a fall?
Or just lounge at the bar, in his mouth a cigar, in his fingers a fizzing highball?
Man, in footballers' fuss, with its mauling and muss; in the basketball batter and bing;
In the slide against spikes; in the hundred-mile hikes; in the swim; in the whirl; in the fling—

WOLGAST WON BOUT

He Will Now be in Line for a Match With Battling Nelson.

San Francisco, Nov. 30.—Ad. Wolgast is hailed to-day as the legitimate opponent of Battling Nelson for the light-weight championship. In last night's 20-round fight with Lew Powell he got the decision, to the disappointment of thousands who backed the Californian at odds of 10 to 8.

The fight was remarkable for the terrific clip the fighters maintained and the disinclination at any time to break ground or shirk punishment.

Wolgast opened the contest as if he intended to make a runaway fight of it. He fairly dazzled Powell with his speed and his agressive fighting as close range was a revelation. Time and again he drove rigat and left short arm jabs to the body and jaw, and kept his arms going with such regularity that Powell was all at sea.

Try as he might he could not elude the Milwaukeean's determined rushes and the best he coul ddo was to protect himself, let alone administer any punishment.

In the twelfth round Powell made his only showing. It was the most vicious round of the night, and for a moment it looked as though Powell might turn the tables. He sent in several ponderous right smashes as Wolgast rushed in, and forced him to stall most of the round. Toward the close of the round, however, Wolgast cut loose again and after administering a fearful beating to the Californian the latter went to his corner groggy.

Wolgast again took the lead and held it to the end, all the time punishing Powell severely about the face and bringing fresh blood in almost every round.

Whence the Wonderful Bread-Life in Five Roses

DO YOU know, Madam, that billowing from the Lake of the Woods clear to the snow-peaked Rockies are the finest wheatlands that ever threw back golden kisses to a smiling sun?

Our selection of a birthplace was indeed most judicious.

We cannot too fervently congratulate ourselves over being born Canadians, can we?

All the infinite resources of Provident Nature have concentrated to produce in our own Northwest a perfect food berry.

It is the cream of this Manitoba wheat crop, not the skim milk, that maketh FIVE ROSES quality.

While our wonderful western climate has contributed in generous measure to make Manitoba wheat the prime cereal of the world, yet you must not overlook the fresh, vigorous soil tilled by our skilful Canadian farmers.

* * * *

"The intense winter frost penetrates deep into the ground. In the spring when the soil is ploughed, harrowed and planted, the lower depths are not greatly disturbed; but in the warm months of June, July and August, this cold storage chamber of nature imparts gentle moisture to the roots of the grain, keeping it cool during the intense heat."

* * * *

If you, Mistress Housewife, with your own white hands, were to pick the very cream of this fine wheat, it would mean perfect flour, wouldn't it?

Yet, you couldn't be more fastidious than our expert buyers.

Just as you wouldn't let Mrs. Brown do your shopping, we watch our own wheat buying and selecting.

Wherever the fairest crops are harvested you would find one of the 75 FIVE ROSES elevators, sifting the perfect berries.

Years of practical knowledge and experience stand behind each buyer, who is well-paid to know where the rare grains grow.

We have the money and the skill to control the very best.

Certainly your interests are well looked after.

* * * *

Believe us, Madam, FIVE ROSES contains only the plump, wholesome, well-filled berries of the spring wheat; the mellow sun-ripened, transparent berries.

All this and more is yours if you will but say "FIVE ROSES" to your grocer:

FIVE ROSES bread—life, healthfulness, purity, strength, economy.

Read the label, Madam, and be flour happy at last.

Earlier Closing of Saloons.

Montreal, Dec. 1.—In accordance with the provision of a law enacted at the last session of the Quebec Legislature a bylaw was introduced in the City Council yesterday providing that saloons shall close at 10 p.m., except on Saturday, when they shall close at 7 p.m. It passed its first reading and it was then moved for second reading. This required the suspension of the rules of the council by a two-thirds vote. The vote stood 26 to 20, and the bylaw accordingly went over until the next session. It is not likely to pass.

PROPELLER BROKEN.

Hamonic's Captain Explains Race With Keewatin.

Sarnia, Dec. 1.—A despatch from Owen Sound appeared in The Toronto World yesterday morning relative to the steamer Keewatin of the C.P.R. line beating the steamer Hamonic between Fort William and Sault Ste. Marie.

The Northern Navigation Co. are indignant that such a misleading statement should have been sent out, as, in an interview with Capt. C. H. Nicholson, traffic manager of the Northern Navigation Co., he says that the steamer Hamonic at this season of the year has been running with reduced crew and only using four boilers for the last five or six weeks and with only one blade and three parts of another blade.

Coming out the Passage Islands she threw one blade entirely and had to check down to twelve miles an hour, and completed the trip at that speed The divers are now at work repairing the blade so that she can make her last trip.

Capt. Nicholson says that if this is the best the Keewatin can do she had better try a race with a freight boat next time, as the Hamonic is conceited to be the fastest and best boat on the upper lakes.

Lawyer Jumps Into River.

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Dec. 1.—E. O. Swarts, a prominent lawyer here, jumped into the icy waters of Saint Mary's River yesterday afternoon from the pier of the American ferry. The first intimation received of his act was when the captain of the ferry steamer Fortune approached the pier, shouting, "Man overboard!" He was fished out by emigration officials and returned to the Canadian side.

Asked why he had gone in, he replied:

"The Lord told me to."

Swarts has been regularly attending evangelical services in the American Soo, conducted by Sheldon and McEwan, and when crossing on the ferry Tuesday night was down on his knees all the way across.

Swarts was in company with Contractor Fagan, who was drowned at Goulais River during the summer.

No Compulsory Drill.

Toronto, Dec. 1.—Sir F. W. Borden Minister of Militia, has written a letter to Sir James Whitney explaining the aims and objects of the Strathcona trust, of the executive council of which he is chairman.

The provinces, he states, taking advantage of the provisions of the trust will be asked for a guarantee that physical training for all children of both sexes will be included in the regular curriculum of the schools.

He refutes the imputation that the object of Lord Strathcona is to bring about compulsory military training in the schools. It is merely asked that encouragement be given to the formation of cadet corps and to the practice of rifle shooting by the pupils leaving the question of participation in these exercises at the option of the parents of the children.

Railway Must Build Gates.

Toronto, Dec. 1.—The Michigan Central and Pere Marquette Railways were yesterday ordered by the Dominion Railway Commissioners to install gates at level crossings at Highgate and Muirkirk stations, upon application of the Township of Oxford Kent County.

The companies put up the plea that the bells at the crossings were sufficient protection according to law, on account of neither place being an incorporated city, town or village.

Chairman Mabee said that bells were only a limited protection at best, and, besides, were frequently out of order.

Constable Had to Shoot.

Brantford, Dec. 1.—The trial of Dominion Constable David Garlow, charged with shooting with felonous intent Curtis Martin, in a recent brawl on the Indian reserve, resulted yesterday in a dismissal. Garlow said that Martin attacked him with a fence rail, and he had to shoot in self protection. One bullet entered Martin's knee and the other his ankle. One leg will have to be amputated to save his life.

German Kaiser Announces Legislation to Improve the Imperial Insurance System—A New Financial Measure —Colonies Are Doing Well—To Extend Trade Agreement With Great Britain.

Berlin, Dec. 1.—Emperor William opened the Reichstag yesterday by personally reading the speech from the throne.

The speech dealt largely with domestic legislation and connected the important announcement that the Government had prepared a measure extending the sick benefit of insurance to the working classes not heretofore protected, and creating a system of insurance for the dependent relatives of deceased workers. The imperial insurance organization will be modified in important particulars.

One of the principal tasks of the Government, the Emperor said, was to fortify the financial position of the empire with the means provided by the finance bill of last session, and this task would be accomplished through the appropriation bill for 1910, which would be laid before the House.

"Our possessions overseas, in Africa and in the south seas," said the Emperor, "are developing well. The growth of their own incomes will relieve the empire considerably of colonial expenses.

"It is proposed," continued Emperor William, "to continue the Usambar Railway to Killimajaro and thus round out the southwest African system. The increase in the working population and in the wealth of the protected districts make a reform in the legal system necessary."

Reference was also made in the speech to the proposed extension for two years of the trade agreement with Great Britain, which expires December 31; to the trade treaty with Portugal; the French-German agreement over Morocco, and to the triple alliance which had preserved the peace for a generation.

"I cherish confidence," said His Majesty, "that the three allied empires will continue to act together, using their strength for the welfare of their people and the maintenance of peace."

Plot to Kill John D.

Cleveland, Ohio, Dec. 1.—Acting upon information given by a man who said that he overheard a conversation in which plans to assassinate John D. Rockefeller were discussed, East Cleveland police guarded Forest Hill, the oil magnate's home, all Tuesday night.

Sawyer Smith, who is a lumber dealer, said he learned from the conversation he overheard near Alliance, that the speakers were to be paid well for either killing or kidnapping Mr. Rockefeller. It was agreed by them that it would be easier to kill and the reward would be the same, Mr. Smith says.

Power Famine In Port Arthur.

Council expects to have a new by-law of agreement with Ontario Hydro-Electric Commission soon. Meantime the city's power supply is so short that lights have to be cut off at midnight on account of low water in the current of the river, due to the dry fall. Council last night appointed a committee to endeavor to make arrangements with the Kaministiquia Co. for the supply of 1,500 h.p. temporary power.

Runaway Youth Is Caught.

Windsor, Dec. 1.—Norman Freeman of Hamilton, sixteen years of age, was picked up in Detroit, in his quest of "Wild West" experiences. He had stolen $80 from his dad before starting out, and the police promptly took him into custody. He had nearly the whole sum concealed on his person.

MONTREAL IS PLANNING TO RANK WITH NEW YORK AS AN ATLANTIC PORT AND HARBOUR

The Harbour Board is Preparing to Spend $12,000,000 in Extending Her Port Facilities ---A Defensive Policy as the Result of the Action Taken by New York---Montreal's Present Advantages.

Examiner Special.

Montreal, Dec. 1.—The commercial supremacy of the port of New York is in peril by reason of plans which have been drawn up by the Harbour Board of Montreal, and which involve the proposed expenditure of $12,000,000 in improving the shipping facilities here. Boston, Philadelphia, Galveston, and New Orleans are also likely to suffer if the incoming Canadian Parliament authorizes the Montreal Harbour Board to carry its extensive undertaking into effect.

The whole scheme of improvement is called in Canada a defensive one, and is the outcome of the project of New York State for a 1,000-ton barge canal. This canal, by affording a direct outlet from the American and Canadian northwest by way of the port of New York, has been regarded from the very inception of its idea as a serious blow at the commerce of the St. Lawrence. The $12,000,000 plan for the Montreal harbour extensions is a blow in commercial retaliation. In the cases both of the barge canal and of the Montreal port improvement there is the impelling force of mutual necessity behind them because of the enormous and constantly increasing grain production in the western regions of North America—a production which demands ports of export.

The plans of the Montreal Harbour Board as outlined by the president, G. W. Stephens, before the Canadian Club, are expected to make water porterage possible by lessening the currents to give water access by way of the canals to Western Canada and the United States; to create manufacturing and warehouse sites with direct rail connections to every port on the continent, and to reduce the handling charges and consequently the freight on every ton of produce passing through Montreal. The proposed improvements there are in line with those at London, Glasgow, Newcastle, Manchester and other important English tide-water terminals, as well as at Hamburg and other places on the continent. President Stephens says that while European ports are equipping for the future the American ports have even underestimated the requirements of the present. The plans for Montreal, he says, will:

1. Double the capacity of the port.

2. Lessen St. Mary's current so that the water porterage from one of the harbours to the other may be possible, thus making the river frontage in the east end of the city as valuable as the centre is now, and will reduce the long cartage charges over the whole area.

3. Will give an all-the-year-round railway service possessing direct rail connections all over the continent, deep water wharfage for ocean liners, and water access by canal to every western part of the continent.

4. Will create manufacturing and warehousing sites possessing direct rail connections all over the continent, deep water wharfage for ocean liners, and water access by canal to every western part of the continent.

5. Will create low priced power for the movement of harbour equipment, grain elevators, etc.

6. Will reduce the handling charges on every ton of freight coming to the port.

Mr. Stephens pointed out to the Canadian Club that the St. Lawrence route from the sea to Montreal is owned and controlled by the people of Canada, has been well equipped, and is being consistently improved, the lighting of the channel between Quebec and Montreal alone having added sixty days to the season of navigation. The port of Montreal, he said, is the only port in North America owning outright thirty-six miles of river frontage free from vested interests. The port of Montreal, he says, is now doing a larger business in seven months than either Philadelphia, Baltimore, or San Francisco does in a year. The Montreal Harbour Board plans have been approved by a board of distinguished Canadian engineers.

FAVOURS THE IDEA

Peterborough Should Have an Industrial Commissioner if the City is to Prosper as It Should.

EMULATE WELLAND

A prominent business man, connected with one of Peterborough's largest industries, expressed himself last night as entirely in favour of the appointment of an industrial commissioner. "It's a new idea," he said, but it has proved a good one, and if Peterborough is to make the progress desired, the citizens will find that a commissioner is an absolute necessity. Some of the more conservative will look upon the engaging of such a man as an extravagance, but they must remember that Toronto, Welland, Hamilton, and other cities have their men in close touch with the industrial and manufacturing world, and knowing what is doing they are enabled to go after the companies. There are at least two men in Peterborough whom I would appoint to the position. I don't think you should go out of your own town. Get a local man who knows the city like a book. If Peterborough is to go ahead in the stride other cities are taking there must be a stronger evidence of confidence in the city on the part of everyone, from labourer to merchant. I was in Welland a few days ago and had occasion to drive out to a little village. Before leaving, the hostler handed me the lines as I got into the buggy, and said, "Are you coming this way, Mister? If you are, you might as well stay over in Welland. It's the best little town on the map." That's the spirit Peterborough citizens should become enthused with, and the result will soon become evident, as soon as the whole city is well inoculated."

Mr. R. F. Stupart, Director of the Meteorological Bureau, who last evening lectured before the Royal Astronomical Society, called upon Mr. Walter Peters, the local astronomer in charge of the official instruments for Peterborough. He complimented Mr. Peters upon his very excellent reports, which he stated were of great assistance to the head office.

CONGREGATION OF MURRAY STREET BAPTIST CHURCH PRACTICALLY UNANIMOUS FOR A NEW EDIFICE

Largely Attended Meeting Examined Plans, Discussed Them and Formed a Canvassing Committee to Take up the Question of Funds--Site is on Murray Street, Opposite Central Park, and is an Admirable Location.

The congregation of the Murray St. Baptist Church was well represented last night at a meeting held for the purpose of considering the advisability of erecting a new edifice next year. The result of the deliberations was in support of the proposal to erect a new church at a cost of $35,000, and a committee appointed to canvass the entire congregation to ascertain how much of this sum can be raised within two years, was asked to report back to the congregation at a meeting to be held in January.

The church is to be erected upon the new site, facing Central Park, recently purchased. This will entail a total expenditure of $45,000 for the beautiful property and the edifice to be erected thereon, and should be a credit not only to the Baptist denomination, but to this progressive city.

The meeting was opened with devotional exercises by the pastor, Rev. J. R. Webb, following which Mr. T. F. Matthews took the chair and presided over the meeting. He explained the object of the gathering. Dr. Browett acted as secretary. Addresses were made by the following gentlemen, all of whom were in favour of proceeding with the erection of the church—Mr. Dunlop, superintendent of the Sunday School; Dr. Browett, Messrs. Geo. Cochrane, Wm. Cochrane H. Webber, Thomas Wilson, C. B. Boutley, V. Eastwood, Rev. Mr. Webb Mr. Cottingham, Mr. Shiner and others.

Complete plans and elevations prepared by Messrs. Edmund & Burke, architects of Toronto, for the proposed new church, wer shown, explained and discussed.

They provide for a most modern and massive stone church and Sunday School, with a total seating capacity of 1,200.

To get the consensus of opinion a standing test vote was taken of all favourable to the new church, and almost the entire congregation at once rose to their feet.

The following motion was then enthusiastically carried:

Moved by Mr. V. Eastwood and Thos. Wilson, that we appoint a committee to canvass the entire congregation with a view to discovering what portion of $35,000 may be secured within the next two years for the purpose of erecting a new church not to cost more than the said sum, and that we pledge ourselves to give such committee the best encouragement possible, and that this committee be requested to report back to the congregation during January.

The following committee was then appointed — Messrs. V. Eastwood, T. F. Matthews, Geo. Cochrane, Wm. Cochrane, T. Wilson, J. Montgomery, Porter White, H. Webber and Dr. Scott.

A vote of thanks was tendered to Mr. T. F. Matthews, chairman of the Building Committee, and Mr. V. Eastwood for the great interest they have taken in this work.

Musical numbers were given by Miss ClaraKidd and Mr. Ferguson, who was accompanied on the piano by Mr. Snyder and by Miss Hope Miller on the violin.

These numbers were well received and deserved the hearty applause with which they were greeted.

Refreshments were served and a pleasant evening was brought to a close.

CAPT. BERNIER TO LECTURE ON HIS ARCTIC EXPLORATION

He Will Touch Upon the Details of His Three Trips in the Frozen Northland--His Address Will be Profusely Illustrated.

The illustrated lecture to be given by Capt. Bernier, of Ottawa, under the auspices of the Royal Astronomical Society in the Collegiate Institute on Friday evening next, Dec. 3, will be of unusual interest, as being delivered by a gentleman whose name has become prominent in Canada and even in the world at large as a great Arctic explorer—Canada's pioneer in that arduous field.

The general subject of Captain Bernier's lecture will be his three subpolar voyages—the first to Hudson's Bay in 1904-5, the second in 1906-6-7, and the third farther north in 1908-9, the latter including what is known as the Sir John Franklin district. The lecture will be illustrated by lantern slides graphically reproduced by striking scenes covered by the several expeditions, rendered interesting if not sacred by being the death and burial place of man yof the men who have lost their lives in the polar search.

Capt. Bernier brought back from his various expeditions many most interesting relics, including maps, records, documents, etc. Some of these relics go back to 1830, nearly eighty years ago, and Capt. Bernier has deposited, altogether 140 articles of these kinds in the national museum, at Ottawa. Many of these articles will be exhibited at the meeting on Friday night. On his last expedition Capt. Bernier took possession of hundreds of thousands of square miles of territory in the name of Canada. A man with a story like Captain Bernier has to tell will be well worth hearing.

Leaves Bride Of Three Days To Travel 2000 Miles

San Francisco, Nov. 27.—Faithful to his promise to the United States Government, though it entailed separation from his bride of only three days, Adolph Hackmeier, a wealthy resident of this city, has left for Alaska to begin a remarkable journey by dog team over the wilds of the northern country.

Before he sees his bride, or any of his relatives, Hackmeier will have traversed a desolate and ice-clad territory more than 2,000 miles in extent. He will be gone three months and will enumerate natives and whites.

Hackmeier went into Alaska nearly a decade ago to make his fortune. He became well known throughout a wide stretch of Alaskan territory. Not long ago he was recommended to the census authorities as the man to gather the necessary data for a considerable portion of the new census of Alaska and consented to take up the work.

Last Sunday Hackmeier was married to Miss Rae Werrin, of San Francisco. Yesterday he sailed away in the steamer Admiral Sampson for Seattle, whence he will go to Seward and begin a lone journey that will take him across 2,300 miles of icy mountains and morass, his only companions being eighteen dogs which are to form his team.

Salvation Army Band Is Preparing A Fine Programme

In connection with the re-opening of the Salvation Army Temple on Simcoe St., the band will render special music under the direction of their new leader, Bandmaster Peryer. On Monday night a special musical festival will be given. The band has been doing some extra practice for the occasion. Some of the Army's latest music will be played. One of the special pieces to be played is a march composed by the new bandmaster, and will be given for the first time in public on Monday night. It is a splendid composition and has been named the Peterborough march. It is to be hoped that a large attendance will be on hand at the first band concert under the direction of its new leader, Bandmaster Peryer.

LINDSAY ROLLER HOCKEY TEAM HERE TO-MORROW NIGHT

The Lindsay Roller Hockey team will be here to-morrow night for a game with the seven representing the Brock St. Roller Rink. The Scugog team won the game played in Lindsay last week by a score of 4 to 1, but the Petes have been practising hard since then and say that they will more than reverse the score registered against them last week. It should be a good game and no doubt will prove very interesting. There will be skating both before and after the game.

"Indian List" Man Has Paid Fifty Dollars in Fines Since He Was Posted—Fined Twenty Dollars This Morning.

PAID FORTHWITH

A well-known young man, whose name is on the blacklist, and who less than a month ago was fined ten dollars for an infraction of the liquor license act, was before Magistrate Bumble at the Police Court this morning, and had to pay twenty dollars for the privilege of imbibing something stronger than ginger ale, a few days ago. Mr. G. N. Gordon appeared for the accused, and pleaded guilty. This is the fourth time that he has been fined, and His Worship increased it ten dollars this morning, and made it payable forthwith. Mr. G. N. Gordon, on behalf of his client, paid it under protest.

In the witness box the defendant stated that he met a young man, by the name of Bert Winters, of Tweed, at the G. T. R. station. He had a flask of whiskey and he asked him to have a drink. Winters did not know that he was on the "Indian list."

"THE WINDS OF THE GLOBE" THE SUBJECT OF A FINE ADDRESS

Mr. R. F. Stupart, Director of the Meteorological Bureau of Canada, Lectures Before the Astronomical Society---An Interesting Evening.

"Old Probs," was here in person last evening in the form of R. F. Stupart, the Director of the Meteorological Bureau of Canada. Before the members of the Royal Astronomical Society and their friends, Mr. Stupart gave a most interesting and instructive address on "The Winds of the Globe."

A large number of the Normal School students availed themselves of the opportunity to secure first hand knowledge of this important subject so difficult to teach intelligently. They undoubtedly were well repaid as the subject was handled in such lucid manner, and with the aid of lantern views that no one could fail in grasping the fundamental principles.

Dr. Marsh, the President of the Society, in introducing the speaker of the evening, referred to the kindness of Mr. Stupart in loaning to Peterborough the excellent telescope now in the hands of Miss Foy. He assured the lecturer that the instrument was of great value and assistance, as well as a source of much pleasure, to the local astronomers.

Mr. Stupart in his address reviewed the history of meteorology, showing how little was the real knowledge of the subject until very recent years. The mariners, however, all the past centuries had been collecting data relative to the course of wind and water and from these facts the underlying principles of the subject could be readily deduced.

By the use of the kite and the balloon in recent years the actual condition of the great upper-air currents, those up ten and fifteen miles, had been ascertained, by equipping these aerial messengers with self-registering instruments. It has been found that at 15 miles' ascension a temperature of 85 degrees below zero existed.

The barometer was an air-weighing instrument, and was the foundation of the whole system of meteorology of to-day. Areas of high pressure simply meant that great heaps of air were there and areas of low pressure that a shallow amount of air was there. And just as water seeks its level so air acts. The result is that the mountain of air rushes down to the valley, and the greater the altitude of this mountain the more intense the wind.

Mr. Stupart showed on the screen the barogram or photo-register of the barometer as it read on the 7th day of August, 1883 in Toronto. On this date occurred the greatest volcanic explosion the world ever saw, that at Krakatoa in Sumatra. The great air waves started around the world in both directions and came to Toronto only a few hours apart. Then again the next day their second trip was registered in no uncertain manner. It was a most interesting feature.

With numerous charts the speaker showed how with the variations in heat and cold winds were started, which with the impetus went further and further. And as these great currents of ar flowed about huge eddies were formed as in water. From these great eddies cyclones and violent storms often resulted. The location of a country in northern latitude did not always mean a certain degree of coldness as these currents of air very largely changed conditions In this connection the coldest spot on earth was pointed out as in the northern part of Russia. The thermometer there had touched 93 degrees below.

Charts were shown of the actual conditions in America on many specific dates and the tracks of great storms traced day after day. These were all extremely interesting and instructive.

Mr. Stupart stated that in Canada there are some 38 depots, one here in Peterborough, where reports are received twice a day. These are sent on to Washington and from there 65 reports are received in return. Then from this exact knowledge the probabilities are forecasted.

A vote of thanks was tendered the speaker on motion of Mr. H. O. Fisk and seconded by Mr. T. A. S. Hay.

Central Smith Farmers Organize New Club

The Central Smith farmers formed a club on Tuesday night similar to that at Norwood and judging from the evidence displayed there is every prospect of its doing splendid work. The meeting was held in the Temperance Hall and its nature and object was explained by Mr. H. C. Duff, who spoke very highly of the work that is being done by the Norwood clubs where the farmers lacked the advantages afforded by such a building as the Temperance Hall. At the conclusion of the address, the possibility of having interesting and profitable meetings was discussed with the result that it was unanimously decided to organize at once. The following officers were elected:—

President—T. H. Graham.
Vice-President—W. Scott.
Sec.-Treas.—C. E. Moore.
Directors—J. A. McGregor and Wm. Scott.

The first meeting will be held in the Temperance Hall on Friday, Dec. 17th. Mr. J. A. McGregor will give a paper on "Winter Feeding the Dairy Cow." Addresses will also be given by President Graham and Mr. Duff and a musical programme will be provided.

CURED WHEN DOCTORS FAILED

Mr. Felix Villeneuve, Cheneby Creek, Ont., writes: "I was a great sufferer from kidney disease and inflammation of the bowels and liver trouble and doctors could not help me much. Could not sleep, water contained sediment, had frequent desire to urinate and often passed blood. Had dreadful headaches, one side almost paralysed, and was deaf in left ear for eight years. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills cured me and I am very grateful. I want to thank you."

GOOD WAY OF SHARING THE IMPERIAL BURDEN.

In the field of Imperial administration in its broadest sense it would naturally be expected that the colonies would play an important part. The home congestion of population might reasonably be expected to be relieved by employment of the illimitable spaces of the dominions beyond the seas. For centuries the home government has, through its mighty navy and, at strenuous times, its army, sheltered these colonies. These have been the wards within which the colonies worked out the problems of nationhood, of political and material development, till now, thanks to the fostering protection of the Home country, to the inspirations of its history, its literature and its humanizing institutions, five of them have developed into nations self-governing and independent in all the essentials necessary to such a condition.

Yet, these nations have not so far, borne anything approximating an adequate share of the burden of empire—have contributed in no definite and continuous way to the defence of the empire of which they form constituents, each as essential to complete imperial wholeness as a right arm to a physically perfect human body. Neither Canada nor any of the "Dominions beyond the seas" will ignore the duty of contributing to imperial development, and the maintenance of the imperial integrity; and Canada, as well as the others, will do its share, on sea as it has, on occasion, done on land. Yet, does our duty end there? Great Britain has reached the limit of capacity for maintaining its population in the condition of employment and comfort, essential to the production of good citizenship and national good health. In the Dominions—in Canada especially—we have far-flung spaces inviting productive occupation and good living for the occupants. We must fill these empty spaces; and, naturally we desire to draw upon the surplus population of the mother land. Of late years we have had a large tide of emigration and have become somewhat critical, as perhaps we should be, of the quality of immigration we should receive and welcome. This is justified to an extreme point in regard to foreign immigration; but are we not in duty bound to be less exacting in the matter of British immigration? In the matter of military and naval defence we recognize our duty of sharing the burden of the empire; may not this recognition extend to bearing a share of the burden of the mother land, by giving a preference to British importations of men as we do to importations of merchandise?

The Montreal Star writes of "immigrants we do not want," these being the "graduates" of the Philanthropic Society's Farm School at Red Hill, Surrey. The farm school is described as "the pioneer of reform work, where the worst cases are received." It is claimed for this school that in the past more than 6,500 hopeless cases have been received, and dealt with, and 93 per cent. reclaimed, and it is further stated that "altogether nearly 2,000 promising colonists have immigrated from the Farm School." The Star is right in regarding work of the school in receiving and "retaining the worst cases" of the slums of London as the proper procedure, but looks upon the work as an experiment, that should be tried out at home, and not in Canada. It says:

> "We have a warm welcome in Canada for the Britisher, rich or poor, who is able and willing to turn in and help us build up a Canadian nation within the Empire. But we do not want "the worst cases" of the English cities sent out here for us to reform."

At first thought our contemporary's contention will be regarded as correct. But may it not be modified? The 2,000 "promising colonists" that have immigrated from the Surrey Farm School were not all "the worst cases," but reclaimed cases, who went to the colonies with a knowledge of farming, rudimentary perhaps, but better than the absolute ignorance of thousands of the British immigrants, who reach our shores.

The idea of the Farm School at Red Hill, Surrey, England, might be adopted in Canada, with the necessary local modifications. We might have attached to our Dominion and Provincial Agricultural Colleges and Experimental Farms a school like that in Surrey for the training of immigrants. Thousands of these come to Canada, to make a beginning in life so utterly ignorant of farm conditions in Canada that in the beginning, no matter how willing to work and learn they may be, they are useless as farm servants; are not wanted, and will not be employed, by farmers.

If a proportion of these were placed upon the farms suggested in the various provinces, when they propose to begin Canadian life, they might be promtly acclimatized, so to speak, and be qualified to become acceptable farm labourers and prospective farm owners and good citizens. The details of this proposal would, of course, be left to the anthorities. The experiment would doubtless work out the justification of the idea. If it did this, the project would be a beginning of the work of bearing the burdens of the mother-land, of solving of the ever-present problem of over-population and non-employment in Great Britain, and would be a substantial benefit to Canada, a continuous form of relief to the mother land and, as the years pass on, a more important element in imperial growth and unity than fleets of ships and armies of men, necessary as these may be.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Ottawa Journal thus remarks:

With Sir Hibbert Tupper stumping with the Liberals of British Columbia and his eighty-nine-year-old father writing from London to approve of the Dominion Government's naval scheme, it almost seems as if the Tupper family had suddenly seen new political light. With both Tuppers—the venerable and the less venerable—each 3,000 miles away from the political storm centre, it is natural that they should be out of step somewhat with the Conservative party, which is not by any means sure where it is at.

MI-O-NA

RELIEVES STOMACH MISERY ALMOST IMMEDIATELY

If the food you ate at your last meal did not digest, but laid for a long time like lead on your stomach, then you have indigestion and quick action should be taken.

Of course there are many other symptoms of indigestion, such as belching of gas, heartburn, dizziness, shortness of breath and foul breath, and if you have any of them, your stomach is out of order and should be corrected.

Mi-o-na tablets have cured thousands of cases of indigestion and stomach trouble. If you have any stomach distress, Mio-na will relieve instantly.

But Mi-o-na unlike most so-called dyspepsia remedies, does more than relieve; it permanently cures dyspepsia or any stomach trouble by putting energy and strength into the walls of the stomach, where the gastric juices are produced.

A large box of Mi-o-na tablets costs but 50 cents at Wm. Madill's and are guaranteed to cure or money back. When others fail, Mio-na cures. It is a producer of flesh when the body is thin; it cleanses the stomach and bowels; purifies the blood and makes rich red blood.

FASHIONS

London, Nov. 27.—A wave of curious mediaeval fashions is approaching England. Although it comes from Paris, the new styles owe their birth to Russia, Italy during the sixteenth century, and England in the thirteenth centry.

The whole note will be barbaric splendour. Wonderful Russian costumes will be worn—for a strong Russian influence will predominate. This will chiefly be exemplified in gorgeous jewelled embroideries, combined with furs.

Sixteenth century Italian styles will also be a delight to the eye. The lines of this period are particularly pleasing and heavy regal embroideries in gold, copper, and platinum will be employed on these dresses.

Every dress, to be up to date, must be parti-coloured. Two at least and sometimes as many as six, colors will be blended together.

The thirteenth century Tabard gowns will also be popular, with curious barbaric embroideries of wool.

SHOULD PRESERVE CANADA'S GREAT TIMBER RESOURCES

Instructive Address Given by Mr. Jas. Lawler, Secretary of the Canadian Forestry Association, Before the Board of Trade Last Night---Forestry Problem Dealt With in a Forcible and Effective Manner.

The address given by Mr. Jas. Lawler, secretary of the Canadian Forestry Association in the Council chamber under the auspices of the Board of Trade on "Canadian Forestry Problems" last night, was well attended and proved highly entertaining as well as instructive. Mr. Lawler is a forcible speaker with a clear grasp of the importance of his subject and he presented his arguments in a manner that left no room for doubt. The lecture was illustrated by stereopticon slides, some of which were furnished by Mr. Nixon, of Farm and Dairy, while the lantern was operated satisfactorily by Mr. H. A. Fife.

Owing to the unavoidable absence from the city of the President and Vice-President of the Board of Trade, Mr. J. H. Larmonth occupied the chair in a most satisfactory manner.

Among those present were Messrs. J. H. Larmonth, T. Q. Quartermaine, secretary of the Board of Trade, J. O. Shook, W. H. Moore, B. F. Ackerman, J. Coyle Brown, W. H. Meldrum, W. H. Meredith, B. F. Mason, Mayor Rush, Warden R. N. Scott, Ald. Duffus, Messrs. H. R. H. Kenner, McCurdy, J. B. McWilliams, D. Denham, H. B. Cowan and about thirty others.

In introducing the subject Mr. Lawler said that the first question that naturally suggested itself to you is why there should be this meeting, why you should be asked to take an interest in the forests of this country. The forests are owned by the Dominion or Provincial governments for the most part and so far as worked are leased to private individuals or lumber companies. These you will say, can be trusted to look after the interests of the people on the one hand, and of the private limit holders on the other. Besides it has always been said that our forests are illimitable and every day the railways are pressing farther into our north country where the forests are. Again, you will argue, even supposing that the supplies of timber do fail, clever men will invent substitutes that will take the place of wood; we can get on without the timber and the land can be used more profitably to grow crops.

There is a good reason for using such arguments. It is only yesterday that our public speakers ceased to talk of Canada's illimitable and inexhaustible forests. Those who live in the older parts of Canada have heard of the struggles of the pioneers to clear the land. They see the fine farms which have replaced the forests and they have always been taught to look upon this as a sign of progress. But while this is a natural belief it is an erroneous one.

In the first place our forests are not illimitable.

In the second place no substitute has ever been found for wood. It is unlikely that one ever will be found and if it is, it will be more costly than the original.

In the third place, supposing a suitable substitute were found, this would not touch the other great uses of the forest, equally important with the supplying of wood. These uses include the conservation of the water supply in our streams with its attendant effect upon waterpowers and navigation, the prevention of soil erosion and evaporation and the forming of a cover for game and insectivorous birds.

The area of the forests of Canada has been very much overestimated. Estimators have dwelt on the size of the belt of timber stretching from Ungava across northern Quebec and Ontario and thence north of the prairies to the Peace River Country. But the timber on much of this is not merchantable. Except for firewood it is scarcely serviceable to man, and firewood cannot be transported long distances. Nowadays, while the matter is still keenly debated, the best estimates fix the amount of Canada's merchantable timber at from one third to one half that of the United States. A very generous esimate places the available supply at 532 billion feet board measure. This seems an enormous quantity but at the present rate of consumption, this would last the United States only twelve years, or England, which is a more careful user only sixty years. A recent Ontario estimate was to the effect, that the timber of this province will last at the present rate thirty years.

All these are estimates made with the hope of arriving at some idea of the situation. They differ widely, but all point to the fact that authorities are agreed that our forests instead of being inexhaustible, are so limited that a period can be set when they will be used up, unless some plan of conservation in forest management is adopted in the meantime.

As to the claim that substitutes will be found. This has not proven to be the case so far. Nor has it in other lines until the cost of the original rose so high as to render it profitable to search for a substitute. In paper making many fibres may be used, but all these cost more to gather and prepare than does spruce-wood.

We are using more steel and concrete in the erection of buildings than ever before, yet the amount of timber consumed has been steadily increasing. In Canada the consumption of sawn timber is figured out to be 730 feet per head per year. That is to say there is every year cut up into lumber in Canada enough timber to make a board walk ten feet wide and 73 feet long for every man, woman and child in the country. Taking in the quantity used for fuel, posts, etc., it amounts to nearly two cords (235 cubic feet) for every person in Canada.

But huge and wasteful as this is it is not so huge as the dead loss from fire which it is estimated destroys every year at least twice as much timber as is used by man. During the nineteenth century more than half the forests of Canada were swept away by fire without doing anyone a particle of good, but on the other hand they were accompanied by the destruction of other property and even of life. While the fire fiend has been somewhat checked in recent years the fire loss would yearly supply a complete railway system with ties, would keep every citizen of Canada warm in the way of fuel, and would supply all the timber required to build a good-sized city.

Revenue.

But the people of this country are deeply interested in the forests in a financial way.

In Ontario the annual revenue received b ythe provincial government is nearly $1.00 per head, or say $5 for the average family. The last return was $2,082,878. That is to say if our forests are allowed to disapear the people of Ontario will be compelled to pay in taxes this enormous sum annually. The only reason why Ontario has not had to resort to direct taxation for provincial needs as in the States of the Union is because the revenues from her Crown lands have been sufficient to meet this need. Thus everbody in Ontario has a direct interest in seeing that the forests are preserved. That total revenue from forest lands held by the provinces and the Dominion is about $4,500,000, which all goes to reduce the taxes.

Trade.

Besides the revenues which the country receives there is the immense trade arising out of timber which goes to enrich the people. The total exports of lumber for which the returns are available was (1908) $49,168,965. To this must be added all the home consumption which is estimated by the census at $50,000,000 per year. The exports for the forty-one years following Confederation, amounted to $1,139,534. This makes an average of nearly twenty-eight million dollars per year. This is one and one-third times the value of agricultural produce exported in the same period.

If this enormous trade were to cease look at the industries that would be lost to Canada; sawmills, pulp and paper mills, furniture factories, waggon works, sash and door factories and all the smaller industries that depend on lumber. One Ottawa mill alone employs 3,500 men during the season.

There would follow the loss of all the industries supplying the lumber trade. These include machine shops, boiler factories, the makers of axes, saws, tools, dry goods, groceries, etc. while the farmer would lose a market for his feed, meat, and live stock. The railways draw a large part of their trade from the lumbermen and much of the shipping of our lake and ocean marine is engaged in carrying forest products. The special census of 1906 shows that 78,000 families or 400,000 people in Canada are dependent on the forest industry, which amounts to about 6 per cent. of the total population.

In speaking of Forestry as related to the Power question he said that all central Canada is without coal and it would appear that Nature had compensated for this lack by providing an abundance of water power. It is estimated by some authorities that Canada has forty per cent. of the waterpowers of the world and these powers are most abundant in the central parts, where coal is not found. Mr. Cecil B. Smith in a recent paper said there was probably now developed in Canada 350,000 horsepower of waterpower. Considered only on a basis of a ten hour day this represented a saving of 1,750,000 tons of coal as compared with about 6,000,000 tons annually imported. The near future will, he stated, see this doubled and trebled. Central Ontario has 200,000 to 300,000 h.p. developed or to be developed outside of Niagara Falls. Since the amount of power now developed could be readily doubled or trebled, it means that we are allowing the equivalent of five thousand to ten thousand tons of coal for every day in the year to flow away in our streams. If we saw coal falling over a precipice and lost forever at this rate we would soon take steps to stop it, but since it is only water we let it go. However, the public is waking up and every day sees more harness put on our streams.

Mr. Lawler took up the question of the preservation of the power, and the regulation of the flow by forestation of the headlands of the streams, and after explaining the loss to the land, through too rapid evaporation, he said that if 20 per cent. of the land were left in trees there would be a larger yield of farm products than if there were no trees.

He gave an interesting account of what has happened in other countries and what will happen here unless forest destruction is prevented.

Palestine was once described as a land flowing with milk and honey, a land of vine, olive and fig trees. It is to-day largely desert because of the destruction of the forests which once crowned the hills.

Syria is in the same condition. A forest expert who went carefully over a district forty miles square, says: this district had once 150 cities and towns ranging from three thousand to three hundred thousand inhabitants. Now each contains but a few squalid families. Antioch which had a population of half a million has now but thirty thousand people. In those days the famous cedars of Lebanon flourished on the mountains. To-day the hills are bare and the lowlands are a desert.

The Johnstown flood and similar disasters were the result of the laying bare of the hills, allowing the water to rush down and break dams and reservoirs. The clearing of the mountains has reduced the regions near the Alleghenies to comparative sterility.

In France about eight million acres of what was previously among the most fertile land in the country lying in the valleys and lowlands, has been ruined by the wash of sand, gravel and loose stones from the hills and mountains over the fields below. Until the forests were cut shortly after the revolution these destroyed areas were amongst the most productive parts of France. The Government of France has spent $40,000,000, in the effort to reclaim the land thus destroyed, and it is estimated that it will take $100,000,000 more to get back partly to where they were before. This does not take in the value of the crops that have been lost nor the value of the trees that should have grown on the mountains.

Because of the ruthless destruction of the forests, northwestern China has become a desert and this desert is rapidly extending. To keep the debris from the mountains from washing over and destroying the lower fields completely, the inhabitants have been forced to terrace with stone whole mountain sides.

Spain is largely desert from this cause, and one of the reasons for Spain's decadence is the decay of her agricultural industry. Much of Southern Europe is in the same position, though the area affected is not so large as in Spain and the Governments of those countries are now spending large sums simply to get back to where they were a few decades ago. Would it not be well for us in Canada to take warning and save the forests upon which so much depends. Otherwise the lesson written all over history is that we will be reduced to the state of China, Spain, Syria, France and many other of the older countries of the world.

Perhaps you think this is only a case of "The Goblins 'ill git ye if ye don't look out." But right at our doors in fertile Southern Ontario the story of these old countries is already being repeated. The desert-making process has gone so far that the Ontario Department of Agriculture has issued a report on the Reforestation of Waste Lands in Southern Ontario. The Government has set aside a sum for the purchase of a portion of these lands in Norfolk County. Prof. Zavitz, of the Guelph Agricultural College has been selected to have charge of this work, and already the work has been begun. The forest nursery has been moved from Guelph to Norfolk county where the conditions are better suited for it, and by the close of this year one thousand acres will be under the control of the Department of Agriculture and much of it planted. Prof. Zavitz, speaking on the quantity of such lands, says that in Old Ontario there are at least 8,000,000 acres which should be managed for forest crops. The annual increment he estimates at $8,000,000.

What can be done to stop the progress of these evils?

In the first place probably sixty per cent. of the Province of Ontario is fitted only for the growing of trees: What should be done in regard to this part is to retain it in forest, and manage is so that it shall continually be producing crops of trees. In this part of Canada there will be scarcely any actual replanting. Various methods are in use by which as the crop of mature trees is taken off, sufficient trees are left to seed the cutting. By the time the last mature trees are cut out there is a good stand of young growth. Fire is kept out, thinning is done from time to time, weed trees are cut out and in sixty, eighty or one hundred years a new crop of timber is ready to be cut.

Such systematic cutting has been carried on in Germany for over a century, with the result that the forests of that country are constantly growing better and constantly producing more timber. Prussia's net revenue from seven million acres of forest is seventeen million dollars per year. The net revenue has risen from 50 cents per acre in 1850 to a little over $2.50 in 1907.

Saxony has 400,000 acres or 625 square miles of forest. That is to say, these forests would cover a square 25 miles a side or about half the area of an ordinary Ontario county. The net revenues from this forest have risen from 95 cents per acre in 1830 to $5.25 in 1905. Thus the forest revenues of Saxony and Ontario are about equal. Saxony has 400,000 acres, Ontario has still in the possession of the Crown 116,080,000 acres or 200 times as much. If Ontario secured from her timber land as much per acre as Saxony does from hers, Ontario would have a revenue from this source of $609,000,000. This is doubtless an impossible figure, but it shows how Ontario's revenue might be increased and how it will tend to increase in the time to come when the best and most intensive methods are employed. This is one possibility. The other is that by careless handling and fire our forests will disappear like those of many other countries and then it will not be a case of revenue but a case of expenditure to protect our farm lands and our waterways and waterpowers. This is the difference between Progress and Poverty.

The Duty of the Public.

What is the duty of the public in this matter.

First and foremost, every citizen should study this subject so as to be able to give an intelligent support to the Governments of the Dominion and the Provinces in their efforts to enforce them so as to secure the best results.

As soon as possible a survey should be made of all the land in the hands of the Crown and a decision arrived at as to whether it is fit for agriculture or not. If not fit for agriculture it should be set apart for a permanent timber reserve and all efforts of settlers to get into it should be resisted. If they are honest settlers, it is a crime to let them go into places where they will be unable to make a living, and if they are dishonest they intend to commit a crime in skinning off the timber when they pretend to engage in farming.

Another great service that everyone can do his country is to preach and practise the doctrine of fire protection. Annually much more timber is destroyed by fire than the lumberman cuts. This is particularly true of the young growth, which while it has little present value is the hope of the future. Most forest fires are due to carelessness of railroads, settlers, campers and the incendiarism of prospectors who wish to lay bare the rocks. People who would recoil in horror from the thought of doing anything that might result in the burning of a $500 barn are strangely careless of setting fire to a $500,000 forest with all the added loss of the destruction of the soil, which will prevent the regrowth of that forest within the lifetime of two men. This is a great moral question and forest fires will never cease until the public conscience is aroused to the criminality of carlessness in this matter. We have been very wasteful in the matter of fires, the fire loss in America being ten times what it is in European countries.

In settled areas where land is not fit for agriculture, as on the sand lands, the obvious duty is to get this back into forest as quickly as possible. The Ontario Government is buying certain sections back at $5 per acre. tI should be supported in this work. Then as the municipalities are directly interested there might well be developed a system of municipal forest reserves in which the lands would be owned by the municipality, but managed by the provincial Bureau of Forestry, the profits over the cost of management to come back to the municipality.

As a nation Progress or Poverty are set before us. The way to grasp the former and avoid the latter is first to find out what we have in the way of natural resources and then to put each part of our territory to that use for which experience shows it is best fitted and by proper care and attention bring it to its highest development.

The following resolution, moved by J. Coyle Brown, seconded by Mr. W. H. Meldrum, was carried at the conclusion of the lecture:

"That a hearty vote of thanks be and is hereby tendered to Mr. James Lawler, Secretary "Canadian Forestry Association," for the very interesting and instructive lecture on "Our Vanishing Forests," given by him to the Board of Trade this evening."—Carried.

YOU WILL NOT BE DECEIVED

That there are cheats and frauds in plenty everybody knows; but it is seldom that any large business house is guilty of them, no matter what line of trade it follows. There can be no permanent success of any kind based on dishonesty or deception. There never was and never will be. The men who try that are simply fools and soon come to grief—as they deserve. Now, many persons are nevertheless, afraid to buy certain advertised articles lest they be humbugged and deluded; especially are they slow to place confidence in published statements of the merits of medicines. The effective remedy known as is as safe and genuine an article to purchase as flour, silk or cotton goods from the mills of manufacturers with a world-wide reputation. We could not afford to exaggerate its qualities or misrepresent it in the least; and it is not necessary. It is palatable as honey and contains all the curative properties of pure Cod Liver Oil, extracted by us from fresh cod livers, combined with the Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites and the Extracts of Malt and Wild Cherry; and how valuable such a blending of these important medicinal agents must be is plain to everybody. It is beyond price in Anaemia, Scrofula, Weakness and lack of Nervous Tone, all Lung Troubles and Impurities of the Blood. Science can furnish nothing better—perhaps nothing so good. Dr. McK. of Canada says: "I have used it in my practice and take pleasure in recommending it as a valuable tonic and reconstructive." It is a remedy that can afford to appeal to its record and represents the science and knowledge of bright and aggressive medical investigation. Like all good things it is imitated. "You cannot be disappointed in it." Sold by chemists throughout the world. Warne Drug Co.

A GREAT PUBLIC BENEFIT

However prejudiced some people are against advertised medicines the general public is greatly benefited by some. For instance such standard remedies as the Cod Liver and Iron preparation called VINOL. Its ingredients are printed on every bottle, and its worth has been proven so often in cases of severe coughs and colds and to create health and strength for the weak and run-down that its sale will continue to increase in the future as it has in the past. CONCERT OF GREAT EXCELLENCE GIVEN BY GEORGE STREET CHOIR

Dubois' Oratorio, "The Seven Last Words of Christ," Sung in Splendid Manner—Choir Assisted by Messrs. F. E. Bemrose and W. G. Craig of Toronto.

A MUSICAL TREAT

Peterborough music lovers again last evening enjoyed an excellent concert. It was given in the George St. Methodist church by the choir assisted by Mr. F. E. Bemrose, tenor of Toronto, and Mr. W. G. Craig, reader. It was only a fair-sized audience that was present, but what was lacking in numbers was made up in enthusiasm, and the programme presented was well worthy of the prolonged applause that greeted those taking part. Dubois' oratorio, "The Seven Last Words of Christ" was sung by the choir, and the splendid manner in which it was given reflects the greatest credit on Mr. W. E. McCann, the organist and choirmaster, who was so painstaking in the training of the voices. The chorus work was exceedingly pleasing, the voices blending perfectly. The solo parts in the Oratorio were sung by Miss C. Reesor, soprano; Mr. Bemrose, tenor, and Mr. Fred Myles, baritone. Their singing was as it always is, much enjoyed and received persistent applause from the audience. One of the finest things of the evening was the singing of "Lead Kindly Light" by the ladies' quartette, consisting of Misses Reesor and Sanderson, and Mesdames Telford and Rehill. The duet and quartette parts in the oratorio were also splendidly sung. The first part of the programme consisted of vocal solos and readings by Mr. Craig, who, in his selections, had to respond to imperative recalls. "The Song of the Camp" and "The Execution of Sidney Carter," from Dickens' "Tale of Two Cities" were given appealing and sympathetic renditions. Mr. Bemrose has an excellent tenor voice and he is always assured of a most hearty reception in this city. Miss C. Reesor who is always a favourite with local audiences, sang a solo very sweetly with a violin obligato by Miss Hope Miller.

ENJOYABLE SMOKER

Knights of Pythias Entertained Their Friends Last Evening.

Last evening in the cosy quarters of the Knights of Pythias on Simcoe street, a delightful entertainment was given by them to a large number of guests who, judging by their applause after each number, thoroughly enjoyed the programme. The committee in charge of the event were Bros. "Tom" W. Wilson, "Tom" Savigny, and W. A. Greenslade.

Mr. Wilson was chairman, and in that capacity was at his best. Before proceeding with the merriment "God Save the King" was heartily sung. Pipes and tobacco were freely handed out by attendant members. Euchre contests were the next event, and suitable prizes were given to the winners.

The programme was as follows:

Instrumental solo—Mr. Hugh Lewis.
Song—Mr. Jack King.
Recitation—Bro. O. Waring.
Song—Mr. Davenport.
Duet—Messrs. J. Firth and J. King.
Banjo solo—Mr. Frank Clark.
Comic song—Mr. E. Thompson.
Instrumental solo—Mr. Sherry.
Song—Mr. J. Firth.
Johnny Schmoker — Gros. Greenlade and Waring, and Messrs. Firth and and Thompson.
Song—Mr. Coleman.

Immediately after the programme light refreshments were served and one and all proclaimed that it was the nicest At Home that they had been at for many years. The singing, recitations and musical events were excellent. It was certainly a very fine entertainment and the Knights of Pythias are to be congratulated on their success.

ONE OF THE BEST EVER SEEN AT THE RUSSELL WAS "BILLY"

The Ottawa Citizen has the following to say of "Billy," which will be presented at the Grand to-night:

The Russell theatre was filled from top to bottom last evening when Billy, the big New York success, was presented. The attraction proved one of the best ever seen at the Russell. It is a big laughing comedy, interpreted by a strong and well balanced cast and presented with the usual Shubert attention to details and excellent staging.

The play is in three acts and all take place on the deck of a steamer. The story circles round a young man who is in love, but who is sadly handicapped by the loss of false teeth replacing four which he lost in a foot ball game. This feature made the play a particularly opportune one for the theatre management to entertain the members of the Ottawa football team who occupied boxes.

Mr. Edgar Atchison-Ely played the titular role and was immense. He was good all through the piece and had an excellent partner in Miss Jane Marbury, a very fetching young woman, in the role of his sister. It would be difficult indeed to improve on the work of the two. Both showed ability of the highest order, were good to look at and acted with an intelligent conception and dashing freshness that gave full value to every line of the dialogue. The other members of the cast were all excellent in their parts and the whole production was of a high order.

SHARP HAT PIN PIERCED HER EYE

Kingston Woman Likely to Lose Her Sight Through Simple Accident

A hat pin figured in a very serious accident, and as a result, a Kingston woman may lose the sight of her eye. She is now undergoing treatment.

The accident occurred in a very simple manner. It appears that the lady's hat was being handed to her, by a friend, and as she was about to receive it, the pin, which had been left in the hat, caught her in the eye. It is not yet known, but it is believed that she will lose the sight of the member. The accident was a most regrettable one, but goes to show how easily an accident of this kind might occur. It is usual for women to leave pins in their hats, and this case should serve as a warning, and precaution taken in the future.—Kingston Standard.

HAS MET WITH GREAT SUCCESS

Firm of Fife & Carroll Has Experienced Much Progress Since Forming Partnership Last July.

The firm of Fife & Carroll, representatives of the Gourlay piano, consists of John Oliver Fife and Charles Joseph Carroll.

Mr. Fife was born in Otonabee, and is a son of the Reeve of Otonabee and a descendant of the Fifes, who were the first people to introduce the Fife wheat into Canada. Mr. Fife has been engaged for many years among the farmers of Peterborough County, and is well-known for his honesty and ability as a dealer in either the capacity of buyer or seller. The many friends Mr. Fife has in the county will no doubt be pleased to hear of the great success he has met with since last July, when he formed a partnership with Mr. Carroll. Their sales have far surpassed their expectations and in the past five months they have sold enough pianos to satisfy some dealers for one year's business, but not so with Fife and Carroll. They believe in progression and advancement.

Mr. C. J. Carroll was born in Guelph, Ont., and was brought up in the piano business. Mr. Carroll started his piano business in 1889 in the City of Toronto, where he went into the factories of one of the leading firms to learn the art of piano manufacture. Mr. Carroll graduated as a first-class pianoforte tuner and tone regulator. He is thoroughly acquainted with piano construction, both the interior and case work of the instrument. Mr. Carroll personally looks after the tuning of all pianos sold by Fife and Carroll, so that purchasers of instruments are protected against the many fraudulent tuners, who are travelling about the country ruining pianos, and being paid for the destruction by their unsuspecting patrons. Any tuning or repairing entrusted to Fife and Carroll will be satisfactorily done and all work guaranteed.

After serving his apprenticeship in the factories, Mr. Carroll travelled for one of the largest firms in the piano business in Montreal as their travelling tuner, and covered the territory east of Ottawa as far as Halifax, N.S., and Sydney C.B. In 1903 Mr. Carroll took charge of the management of Heintzman and Company business in Hamilton, Ont., where he made a great success of it, and left there to go into business for himself. Mr. Carroll formed a partnership with Mr. Fife in July last, under the name of Fife and Carroll. He is delighted with this district and the future outlook for business. He speaks favourably of the future of the player piano, and has made arrangements with the manufacturers of the Angelus player for the firm of Fife and Carroll to sell it in Peterborough and district.

Mr. Lastar's Reply To The Literary Critic

To the Editor of The Examiner or to the Literary Critic:—

As a matter of fact I have already stated that I would not answer any letters not signed by the name of their writers. I detest having a controversy with unknown spirits. Surely I would presume those nameless writers have at least a father to leave them a name or are their names so distasteful that they would be ashamed to mention them. Surely it is not that. The only reason I can see in it is the writer or even critic, whatever he is, has the coward in him. He would like to strike without being hit himself. No, sir, everyone who is ready to give must be ready and willing to take any bumps and be contented. So therefore from now on, although I am making an exception with this letter because it will bring benefit to the Children's Aid and I would also like at the same time to relieve this doubtful critic of the $25 spot and make him wiser. But I will not answer any other unsigned letters. Whenever he reads a letter signed by B. Lastar there is absolutely no fooling in it, and it is written by himself. I will assure him that I do not need an yhelp in making these letters. I did apply at one time to a certain party on account of my knowledge in spelling the English language being very limited, that he should come over and take in shorthand what I would dictate to him, but as he never came and as my letters are not ready for printing as they came from my pen, I therefore made use of the generous offer made to me by Mr. Alexander Elliott that at any time I have a letter I should come to his office and his type writer would run it through the machine and if any errors in spelling she makes them right. And so after I sit for a number of hours after all my children are in bed, I simply take my pen or pencil and write away and the next morning I read that to the stenographer and the letter is done. The critic wants a committee to be appointed of competent men to satisfy him that I was the author of those letters and it also seems to me he also thinks as some others have expressed in their letters to me that I am only a medium between the hotelmen and the public, and am getting paid for my work. Let me tell you and everyone that I have never claimed or received anything directly or indirectly from anybody for writing those letters except some abuse by unknown parties who would not dare to mention their names even in private letters. I therefore, to satisfy him, have my original manuscript at the Examiner office, and the critic or any committee appointed by him can examine them. As further proof that those letters were put up by me I will give them the references of a few gentlemen who saw me writing notices while the speakers were speaking in the Opera House. If that should not satisfy them I am intending to write another letter for Saturday on the subject of local option and if the committee will be satisfied and will be patient I will write my letter in their presence, providing they won't bother me. That should satisfy you so take out the $25 spot and give it to the kids. Let them enjoy themselves, and if my letters will help or not the general public this $25.00 will do some good to the children.

The critic named my first two letters as my ideas are jumbled together in senseless words, while in the third letter he found wonderful change. Let me tell him that although he thinks himself a critic who can give his opinion about my letters, why the first letter appears to him better than the first two. In the first letter I was writing about what had happened just recently and facts that were absolutely without doubt, that I was right without leaving them room to justify themselves, while the others had facts just as weighty as the last mentioned, but the facts were a little farther and the critic could not reach them, and his brain would not go that far as to understand the full meaning of the letters. Therefore, let the critic study those two first letters, and I am sure that he will find that they were not senseless. As to comparing me with Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde, the critic himself would more be suitable to him than myself, as he has noticed already in all my letters, or if he knows me personally he will find me always B. Lastar, while the critic has surely one name to trace and is afraid or dont want to, as Dr. Jekyl, from now on, try to be rather Mr. Hyde and sign your name to your letters. I ask as a favour that this critic, if he finds everything satisfactory, will give his name so that people will know that I did not write the letter signed Critic to answer it myself.—Yours truly,

B. LASTAR.

"Every breeder of live stock will be interested in the latest magazine issue of Farm and Dairy. The cover is in two colours, the central figure shows the photograph of a noted Clydesdale stallion, and is most pleasing. It illustrates to a nicety the points looked for in the Clydesdale as a draft-er. The issue is well illustrated throughout, the subjects dealt with are quite in keeping with the interests treated.

The first article by Prof. H. S. Arkell, of Macdonald College, is one that every farmer should and ought to read. It shows how middlemen and dealers are getting the big profits, while the farmer is held down to the lowest price that he will stand for (only a living wage.) The article then suggests a remedy. A feature of the issue are special articles dealing with the methods and management of such well known breeders and importers as Smith and Richardson, Senator W. C. Edwards, David Duncan and Hector Gordon. These articles are all well illustrated and deal with such matters as have made for the success of these men.

A long list of other articles most helpful to all who make their living on the farm, and of value to anyone desirous of improving himself on live stock generally, is to be found in this special issue of Farm and Dairy.

Farm and Dairy has made wonderful progress during the past year. It is published every week and costs only $1 a year. The magazine number mentioned above, The Breeders' Issue—is the eighth of a special series that go with the regular subscription. You should read Farm and Dairy. Subscriptions may begin at any time. Subscribe through this office, or club with this paper, if you desire. Special clubbing rates on application. The special Breeders' Issue can be had at office of publication for 10 cents a copy, and is well worth that price.

A SERVANT OF THE COUNTY FOR OVER THIRTY-EIGHT YEARS

Mr. J. Coyle Brown, Public School Inspector, Who Resigned Yesterday, Has Been Long Connected With Educational Matters in This District.

The County of Peterborough loses one of its oldest and most valued servants in the person of Mr. J. Coyle Brown, Public School Inspector, whose resignation was handed in to the County Council at yesterday afternoon's session.

Mr. Brown is a native of Scotland who came to Canada when he was little more than an infant. He received his education at what was at that time called the common school, at the Normal school, Toronto, and at Victoria College, Cobourg. Previous to his being appointed inspector he taught in the townships of Alnwick, Smith and Dorchester, in the village of Hastings, in the town of Cobourg and in the city of London, Ont. He had thus a good opportunity of becoming acquainted with the various classes of public schools and the experience he gained in this way was invaluable in his duties as inspector.

Appointed inspector of public schools for the county of Peterborough in June 1871 he has occupied the position continuously ever since a period of thirty-eight and one half years in which he has devoted the utmost energy to the ever increasing responsibilities of his position as the needs of the schools grew greater and the number under his jurisdiction increased. He has been a faithful servant of the county and is well known in every section of the district. His very many friends will unite in the hope that his remaining years may be spent in ease and comfort.

TO-DAY'S SESSION OF COUNTY COUNCIL MARKED BY ROUTINE

Finance Committee Spent Busy Morning Passing Accounts—Some of the Communications Received—Mr. J. Coyle Brown's Resignation.

OTHER BUSINESS ITEMS

The County Council recommenced work this morning at ten o'clock and immediately went into committee. The committee on Appointments held a brief session, during which Mr. Donald McNaughton, of Norwood, was appointed trustee of the Norwood High school, succeeding Mr. Breckenridge, who has resigned. Afterwards the Finance Committee began to look over a long list of accounts that have been collecting for some time. The entire morning was spent at this work.

Yesterday afternoon the following communicattions were received:

Lakefield, Sept. 21, 1909.

Mr. Robert Shaw, Lakehurst—

Dear Sir,—We, the Ministerial Association of the Village of Lakefield hereby convey to you and through you to the House of Refuge Board our appreciation of your thoughtful, kind and generous donation.

While some little time and energy is required for this particular work yet if we can in any way improve the spiritual condition of our elderly brothers and sisters in the House we are amply repaid.

Your gratuity therefore is a most agreeable expression of your interest in our House of Refuge work. With thanks.—Yours cordially,

A HILLIARD JONES,
Secretary.

Exempt From Taxes.

I am directed by the Minister of Agriculture to acknowledge your favour of June 19th enclosing copy of a petition in favour of the exemption of farm buildings in rural municipalities from taxation. I am instructed to say that the petition will be duly laid before the special committee appointed by the Legislature at its last session to consider the revision of the Assessment Act.

W. BERT ROADHOUSE.
Minister's Secretary.

Mr. J. C. Brown Resigns.

Theh following letter from Mr. J. Coyle Brown was on motion received.

I hereby tender my resignation as Inspector of Public Schools for the county, to take effect on the 31st of January, 1910.

I am impelled to take this step on account of the ill health of my wife which necessitates my remaining home, also that the Council and the Education Department may have a free hand, so far as I am concerned in making alterations in the boundaries of school inspectorates which alterations are to come into effect on the 1st of February next.

During my term of office I advocated changes which were not favourably received. Among them may be mentioned "a change in the use of the alphabet in spelling" to render our language more phonetic and materially lessen the time necessary to acquire a knowledge of spelling and reading. Another change was the "Half day system in rural schools during the summer months," the effect of which would be to give a better education to county children and lessen the unfortunate migration from the county to the town. I have no doubt both of these changes will yet be adopted.

During the 38 1-2 years that I have been in office I have received many acts of kindness from the County Council. For these I sincerely thank you and your predecessors. I am gentlemen, your obedient servant.

J. COYLE BROWN,

Peterborough, Nov. 30, 1909.

New Inspectorates.

The letter from the Education Department in connection with the forming of a new Public school inspectorate was as follows:

Toronto, November 23rd.

Dear Sir,—I am directed by the Minister of Education to notify you, that under the proposal scheme of re-organization of the inspectorates, while the number of the Public schools in your county is too large for one inspector, it is not large enough for two. As the situation has been the same in the County of Victoria, he recommends that, in lieu of Inspector Brown of Peterborough and Inspector Knight of Victoria, who have both resigned, you make an arrangement with the County of Victoria for the appointment of one Inspector who shall have charge of schools in both counties. In order to enable you to make an arrangement I am directed by the Minister to submit for your consideration the enclosed schedule of visits which he intends to prescribe early next year; also, a memorandum of suggestions as a basis upon which the salary of the new inspector may be competent In arranging the districts of the three inspectors, he desires you to understand that he will require the inspectors to devote, each, the same amount of time to the work of inspection, so far as it is practicable to secure this condition. In determining the number of schools to be taken by each inspector, you will bear in mind the amount of time to be spent in travelling, but in no case shall the length of the visit prescribed in the schools be reduced.

A. H. U. COLQUHOUN,

The Schedule.

Schedule of minimum length of visits to be paid each half year is proposed as follows:

Rural Schools—

Half day's visit for each school with one teacher.

One day's visit for each school with 2 or 3 teachers.

One and a half day's visit for each school with four teachers.

Urban Schools—

One day's visit for each school with 3 teachers, when the number of teachers is an exact multiple of 3.

One and a half day's visit for each school with 4 or 5 teachers.

Two and a half day's visit for each school with 7 or 8 teachers.

Three and a half day's visit for each school with 10 or 11 teachers.

A similar increase of time for schools with more teachers.

The Minister also intends to provide that when a teacher is experienced, the inspector shall visit his school as soon as practicable after he begins his duties, and that the Inspector shall also visit such teachers and others who need special supervision from any other cause as often as the circumstances may demand and the inspector's other official duties will permit. These special visits the Minister will himself arrange for.

Wednesday Afternoon.

This afternoon a deputation of Douro residents asked the Council to take action regarding the Union School near Pine Grove. It will be remembered that this was discussed at length during the June session. On motion it was decided to leave the question until the January session in the hope that the two townships will settle it. At three o'clock it was arranged that the Council meet Judge Huycke in his chambers which the County has recently renovated, and brightened. The old time-worn furniture has been replaced by new, new hardwood floors have been laid, new furniture added, the walls have been treated by the paper hanger and with new paint, the judge's chambers have been made very cheerful and pleasing. Following this appointment the members of the Council to the new dam.

MARVELLOUS HEALING POWERS

The most severe test to which a healing ointment is ever put is the cure of eczema. So successful has Dr. Chase's Ointment proven in the cure of torturing itching eczema that many people refer to its effects as magical and marvellous. A BRIGHT IDEA

Who said women lacked ingenuity and inventive skill? That party knew not whereof he chattered. Leave it to a woman—especially a chorus girl—to invent anything that is imperatively needed to fill an aching void.

Two chorus girls—very pretty ones, too—the Francesca Sisters, were trying to figure out something new in the way of neckwear the other day. As they figured they chanced to note the tasseled ropes that held back the portieres of their rooms.

"Oh, joy!" cried Nita.

"Oh, goody!" cried Estelle.

They seized the tassels, detached them from their anchorage, and wrapped them around their necks. Now, Estelle parades proudly with purple tassels around her shapely throat, while Nita has a pair of scarlet tassels dancing as she walks. And all the other girls in the show are so jealous and bewildered that they are almost choked, while requests for the name of the store where those tassels are for sale are showered upon the sisters.

CONDITION OF MILITIA

In Report of Department of Militia and Defence, New Inspector-General Says That He Favors Drill For Boys — Foster Asks About Rush-Bagot Treaty With U.S. —Sir Wilfrid Laurier Replies.

Ottawa, Dec. 2.—Sir Frederick Borden yesterday tabled in the Commons the report of the Militia Council for the fiscal year ending March 31 last.

Some remarks as to the general efficiency of the various Canadian militia units are made by Sir Percy Lake, inspector-general. On the whole, he says, there is little doubt but that the infantry is steadily advancing in efficiency, owing greatly to the appointment of brigadiers. The training of nearly all military corps suffers from the tendency of most commanding officers to forget that company drill is the foundation of the more advanced training. The artillery forces had maintained their standing, and perhaps made progress towards further efficiency. The cavalry, was on the whole, better mounted than usual, the best mounted corps being those of Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

The report of the council notes that it has been decided to proceed with the organization of a Canadian general staff, which will in time become the Canadian section of the imperial general staff.

"I entirely associate myself with my predecessor's remarks as to the value of military training in schools. Mentally and physically, it is a most valuable aid to education. From a military point of view, it is almost the only means by which a citizen force can hope to surmount the difficulties imposed by the practical impossibility of exacting an adequate period of annual training from adults."

The expenditure for the year was $6,484,806, a decrease of $311,218 as compared with the previous year. The number of men of all ranks trained was 45,532, at a total expenditure of $1,054,416. During the previous year 44,121 men were trained at an expenditure of $1,084,499. In 1904-5, only 33,874 men were trained, at an expenditure of $677,724.

In the House yesterday, Hon. G. E. Foster moved for an order "for a copy of the correspondence, papers and letters in respect to the agreement between Great Britain and the United States for the maintenance of war vessels on the great lakes, including the agreement itself, the several requests made for permitting the United States war vessels to pass the canals, with description and armament, the places where they are stationed, and the purpose for which they are used."

The Rush-Bagot agreement of 1818 had stipulated that one vessel of one hundred tons, and carrying one eighteen pounder gun would be allowed by either country on Lake Champlain, one on Lake Ontario and two on the upper lakes. During late years this armament had been considerably exceeded by the U. S., which now had on the great lakes nine vessels, all many times the specified tonnage and armament.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier said that it would have been better had Mr. Foster, instead of trying to raise a scare, been able to suggest a remedy. The Rush-Bagot arrangement had served an excellent purpose. The treaty might be terminated by either country giving six months' notice. That would make the situation worse, and might lead to a large expenditure in the building of vessels. Under such circumstances it was incumbent upon us to be careful as to what we did and said. The agreement was discussed by the joint high commission in Washington in 1899. It had been more recently under consideration by the two Governments.

Dynamite Explosion.

Cobalt, Dec. 2.—Alfred Silvila was instantly killed and Allan Caswell and Wm. Kokka seriously injured in a dynamite explosion in the Fourth of July shaft at the Nipissing mine about five o'clock Tuesday night. The men were alone in a raise preparing to fire, and it is thought that their candles came in contact with the powder. Caswell's injuries are serious. The dead man was 26 years of age, and lost his wife from typhoid scarcely a month ago.

Casting Fell on Him.

London, Ont., Dec. 2.—William Cook, an employe of the Leonard Boiler Works, was terribly crushed by a two-ton casting falling upon him. No one seems to know just how the accident happened, as the man was working alone at the time. He was found unconscious by some of the employes and taken to the hospital, where he died last night.

Nitro-Glycerine Exploded.

Cameron, W.Va., Dec. 2.—With a roar heard twenty-five miles away, the nitro-glycerine magazine of the Marietta Torpedo Co., near here, exploded yesterday. An oil well shooter named Shuster was blown to pieces, as were also a horse and wagon, and walls were cracked in nearly five hundred houses.

Wilcox Coming to Toronto.

GRAFT IN COUNCIL

Reeve Sutherland of East Zorra and J. L. Buchanan of Ingersoll Are Charged With Having Taken Money From Agents Who Had Goods to Sell to the County— Mr. Sutherland Denies It.

Woodstock, Dec. 2.—An investigation by County Judge Finkle of charges made by certain ratepayers that there had been graft in connection with the administration of the county roads system of Oxford County was held here yesterday, and some decidedly startling statements were made by witnesses. The judge will prepare a report on the evidence to be submitted to the council.

James Vance, an agent for the Hamilton Bridge Co., swore that he paid Charles Sutherland, reeve of East Zorra, and chairman of the Good Roads committee of the County Council, $50 for his signature to an acceptance of Vance's tender at $3,950 for a steel bridge for Wolverton. Vance states that Sutherland demanded $100, but reduced his request when Vance told him there wasn't that much profit in the deal.

Reeve Sutherland positively denied getting any money out of the transaction, saying that none was ever offered him, but charged Vance with having endeavored to bribe him with $10 on a smaller bridge contract at a later date.

An astonishing story was told by James L. Thayer of Aylmer, general agent for the J. I. Case Threshing Machine Co., implicating M. T. Buchanan of Ingersoll, that town's representative in the County Council for many years until two years ago, in questionable transactions. In 1907 Oxford County entered upon a system of roads construction and appointed a committee to purchase machinery. The committee interviewed Thayer, and he was advised by one member to see Buchanan.

Buchanan wanted to know what commissions were paid agents by the company. Thayer told him, and informed him that Lancelot Waller of Tillsonburg was the local representative. The committee bought two steam road rollers for five thousand dollars and paid for them. When the company undertook to settle up the commissions Buchanan appeared and demanded four hundred dollars, claiming he had made an arrangement with Waller, who had, in the meantime, died, that he was to get half the commission.

His claim was that he was boss of the council, said the witness, and had used his influence in behalf of the contract. The sum of $340 was paid, Mr. Thayer said, to avoid a lawsuit. The $340 was later repaid by Buchanan.

Quebec Judgeships.

Montreal, Dec. 2.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier has given the Montreal bar to understand that the vacancies on the Superior Court of this province will be filled without delay. It is understood that Mr. Ethier, M.P. for Two Mountains, will replace the late Judge Rochon in Pontiac. As soon as Hon. W. A. Weir is appointed to replace Judge Curran, it is said J. C. Walsh, ex-M.P. for St. Ann's, will be made judge of sessions here.

Another Crossing Accident.

Brampton, Dec. 2.—As the G.T.R. 4.30 p.m. train entered the town yesterday, Miss Fannie McCollum, who was crossing the track, was struck and instantly killed. Miss McCollum, who was slightly deaf, evidently did not hear the electric bell, which is placed at this crossing. She had lived in the town for many years. She was a sister of A. E. McCollum, the photographer.

New York, Dec. 2.—Mrs. Hetty Green has again become a figure in Wall street. Within the last two days she has been a large lender of money in the financial district, advancing funds for time loans at 4 1-4 per cent. interest, a figure slightly below the current rate. In all cases she reserves the right to name the collateral deposited to secure the loans.

CURE FOR WHOOPING COUGH

Mrs. William Ball, Bracebridge, Ont. writes: "My three boys had whooping cough and we could get nothing to help them until we used Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine. It arrested the coughs at once and they kept on improving until they were cured at the cost of one dollar. This was not a large bill for so dangerous and distressing an ailment."

FOR WALL STREET SUCCESS

Just a Few of the Qualifications Necessary if One is to "Beat the Game."

The clergyman who says that he can take "a $100 bill, a pencil and a pad" and make a fortune in Wall street recommends the process only to those who possess one important qualification. They must know the game. Given that, the rest is easy. To know the game thoroughly it is necessary to be in the confidence of the board when ten per cent. dividends are to be declared; to learn ahead of the crowd what stock is next to be marked up on the strength of rumors of dividend guarantees; what bankrupt road is to be sold to a syndicate; what manipulations the bull pool is about to undertake, and to have other advance information equally helpful. It is given to few to possess this knowledge, no doubt by a wise provision of nature which permits the many to be sacrificed that the most fit may survive. If it were possible for any one with a $100 bill to become a Wall street millionaire the aggregation of swollen fortunes would menace the republic. Doubtless in the case of the clergyman in question the gain to the ministry involved the loss of a magnate to the financial world. But for the ordinary run of speculators there is no place where a little learning is so dangerous a thing as in Wall street.

American Girls Responsible.

Probably the American woman is answerable for a good deal of the unrest among the daughters of France for she comes among them with all sorts of daring projects and perfectly lovely clothes. She marries their brothers, she studies art, music and literature in their country and she walks serenely on along the path of liberty, to the amazement of men, angels and the Parisian.—The Queen.

A Kindness That Failed

By Martin Wilson

(Copyright, by J. B. Lippincott Co.)

Hawkins is one of those amiable and philanthropic men who are always ready to fall over themselves in their efforts to do a kind deed, no matter how trifling in importance it may be.

One day Hawkins was on a railroad train, and directly in front of him in the crowded car sat a big, red-faced, pugilistic looking man and a demure looking little woman. Presently the beefy-looking man got up and went forward into the smoking car.

At the next station but one the demure looking little woman got up and left the train. She had been gone but a moment when Hawkins noticed she had left a handsome silk umbrella with an ebony and silver handle on the seat in which she had been sitting. Here was Hawkins' opportunity to obey the old song in which we are bidden to

Do a kind deed when you can, brother,
Do a kind ded when you can.

Snatching up the umbrella, Hawkins ran quickly to the door of the car and looked for the woman in the crowd on the platform. He saw her at some distance from the car talking to a herdic driver, and he was about to hasten after her when the conductor called out:

"All aboard!"

Handing the umbrella to a boy by the car step, Hawkins said:

"Here, boy! Hand this umbrella to that lady with the blue hat talking to the herdic driver at the end of the platform. She left it on the train. Perhaps she'll give you five cents for returning it to her—yes, yes, the lady in black, with the blue hat."

The train started, and Hawkins went back to his seat with an inward exaltation that comes from the doing of a good deed.

The train had gone three or four miles when the beefy and pugilistic-looking individual came into the car, and, walking up to the seat he had vacated, looked around for a moment, and then said to Hawkins:

"'Scuse me, my friend, have you seen anything of an umbrella I left on this seat when I went forward into the smoker?"

Hawkins paled as he said:

"Er—ah—ah—oh, did you leave an umbrella on this seat?"

"That's what I did! An' a brun spankin' new one it was, at that! I gave six dollars an' fifty cents for it only yesterday! It had an eb'ny an' silver handle, an', by jacks, I want it! Didn't see anyone swipe it, did you? It couldn't be that that little woman I was settin' with pinched it."

"No—no—she—she—didn't," Hawkins said.

At that moment the conductor entered the car and the big man said:

"Lookee here, Mr. Conductor, some chump on the train has swiped my umbrella an' I want it back! A man who'll steal an umbrella will steal a sheep! If I kin lay hands on the man who done it, I'll wipe up the ground with him; that's what I will! Things have come to a pretty pass when a man can't leave an umbrella in a car without having it swiped!"

A hook-nosed old woman with a pair of small black eyes glittering behind iron-rimmed spectacles leaned forward across the aisle, and, pointing a lean finger towards Hawkins, said in a high-pitched, nasal voice:

"That man there tuk your umbrella an' handed it to some one on the platform. I seen him!"

The irate man squared himself and glared at Hawkins.

"What you got to say to that, my friend?" he asked.

"I—I—beg your pardon," said Hawkins, "but I—I—thought the umbrella belonged to the lady who left the car at the last station. I—I—gave it to a boy to hand to her. I'm very sorry."

"Are, hey? Well, my meddlin' friend, I hope you're sorry six dollars an' fifty cents' worth, for that's what it'll cost you to git out o' this scrape. So fork over!"

"I—I—it seems to me that—that—"

"It seems to me that you'll fork over six dollars an' fifty cents, or I'll take it out of your hide! I ain't goin' to lose no six-dollar-and-a-half umbrella on account o' your meddlin'. So, you anty up!"

Hawkins, who tips the beam at 136, looked at the muscular giant before him, and then, holding out a ten-dollar bill, said meekly:

"Have you three dollars and fifty cents in change?"

"There is such a thing as a man bein' too derned obligin'," said the beefy man, as he handed Hawkins the required change and then went back to the smoker, while Hawkins affected not to hear the titter of the hook-nosed old lady across the aisle.

The Old Woman's Remarks.

"I don't know what's to become o' the ol' man of they keep on votin' the states dry," said the old lady. "It didn't cost so much fer him to go to Chattynoogy, but as Tennessee will be as dry as a bone in July, that'll take him a step further, an' he jest can't afford the money. Of course he kin blind-tiger it to Georgy, but it's no longer safe fer him to do so, seein' that he kin no more hiver up his tracks, fer ever' time he tries it they hetch up with him an' haul him up before meestin', an' he's gittin' too ol' now ter risk bein' turned out the church, fer Satan might ketch him on the outside an' sweep him off 'fore he has a chance to git back agin. But the states air dryin' up one after another, an' I kin see him buyin' a railroad ticket as fur as Kalamazoo—an' I b'lieve that country would be dry 'fore he hit it!"—Atlanta Constitution.

PECULIAR IDEAS OF AUTHORS.

Varying Conditions Under Which the World's Great Writers Did Their Best Work.

Alexander Pope, who was the literary pontiff of his time, thought best when in bed. Whenever a thought came to him he would jot it down on a scrap of paper. His servant often found bedclothes and floor covered with white bits containing aphorisms which have now become hackneyed quotations.

Victor Hugo wrote "Les Miserables" standing up, an attitude which Hawthorne also assumed when he wrote many of his romances.

One leg thrown over the arm of a chair or sitting on the arm of his secretary's chair were Napoleon's favorite positions while dictating to Bourrienne, a position which he varied now and then by patting that scribe on the head or pulling his ears.

Sir Walter Scott could while reclining on a lounge dictate to two amanuenses, who frequently had to stop writing, so funny the dictated passages seemed to them.

William Morris made one of his famous translations from the Greek while riding on the steam cars. Walt Whitman and Horace Traubel, original in all things, were most original in the position they took while thinking. They were wont, so Mr. Traubel says, to climb upon a pile of lumber and lie down upon their backs. In that way each found out what the other's best thoughts were.

Coming Down Easy.

Inquiries after the welfare of Patrick Conroy were answered by his devoted friend, Terence Dolan, who was at the Conroy's in the double capacity of nurse and cook. "No, he's not dangerously hurt at all," was Mr. Dolan's reply to a solemnly whispered question at the door.

"We heard he had a bad fall and was all broke to pieces," whispered the neighbor.

"'Tis a big story you've heard," said Mr. Dolan, in his cheerful roar. "Thrue, he fell off'n the roof o' the Brady stables, where he was shingling and he broke his lift leg, knocked out a couple of teeth and broke his collarbone.

"Mind ye, if he'd have fell clear to the ground it might have hurted him bad, but sure there was a big pile of sbtones and old lumber that broke his fall."—Youth's Companion.

Be Amiable and Retain Youth.

As a charming woman once said: "To remain always young one must be always amiable." A melancholy face, a sullen, an evil look, is like coming in contact with winter; whereas a serene face, a gracious air, a kind and good expression, is like a spring day, and a smile on the lips like its sunshine. Sulky people, you may have remarked, always appear to be ten years older than they are. The face grows wrinkled from contracting the brows; the mouth projects disagreeably when sulking. Behold beside the portrait of the sullen woman the picture of the sweet and gracious woman; all her features are in repose, her lips form an adorable Cupid's bow, kindness softens her glance and goodness illuminates her brow. Perhaps she is the elder, but she will always appear young and charming.

The Ill-Natured Man.

The ill-natured man, though but of equal parts with the good-natured man, gives himself a larger field to expatiate in. He exposes those failings in human nature which the other would cast a veil over; laughs at vices which the other either excuses or conceals; falls indifferently upon friends or enemies; exposes the person who has obliged him; and, in short, sticks at nothing that may establish his character of a wit.

CANADIAN RUNNER MADE GREAT SHOWING AT YONKERS

Dan Sheridan of Toronto, Unattended, Led the Field of Ninety Runners for Twenty-one Miles and Finished Second---First Time Over the Course.

The New York Journal says:

"Coming from behind on the last few miles of the long 25-mile trek, Harry Pensen, lusty-lunged, sturdy limbed and stout hearted wearer of the Brazilian cross, winner of the Long Island and Stamford Marathon, and a place winner in many others, travelled the gruelling Marathon trail to victory in the postponed Thanksgiving Day classic of the Mercury yesterday. Daniel Sheridan of the Vermont A.C., of Toronto, who finished second in the recent Guelph Marathon and who led for twenty-one miles yesterday tired and tottering, but game to the core, reeled over the line in second position, just nosing out the flame-haired Mike Ryan of the Irish-American A.C. fourth in the Yonkers classic in 1907 a plate winner in several Boston Marathons and a member of the victorious Yankee Olympic team that swept the boards in London last year.

Covered with mud from head to toe and reeking with perspiration, but otherwise showing no effects of the long hike in the teeth of a biting chilly wind from off the Hudson River, over the muddy hills of Westchester, the stiffest Marathon course in the world, Jensen, striding straight and true, crossed the line in splendid time of 2.46.43 1-5. The plucky Canadian who finished second was clocked in 2.49.35 2-5, and the watches caught Ryan at 2.49.40.

"Though Yonkers was searched high and low, Sheridan's attendants were unable to procure a bicycle, and the runner started the hike without an attendant, although a boy who would not loan or sell his bicycle attempted to accompany the Canadian. The kid was knocked out on "Little Rock Mountain."

With a long train journey behind him, with practically an empty stomach and hitting a trail which he never had seen, the game Canadian for 21 miles fronted the pack and led them at a crackling clip. Going out at the crack of the gun, Sheridan set a terrific clip and before five miles were covered he had the field in trouble, only the strongest staying anywhere within striking distance.

The Canadian was leading by more than half-a-mile when the ten-mile post was passed. Then he came back a bit to Jensen. The long, hard hike up Central avenue found the Canadian weakened from his early exertions, and it was there that Jensen began to close on him. Sheridan stuck to his task like a hero, however, and plugged gamely along the trail that blurred and danced before his tired eyes. It was not till the goal was in sight that Jensen passed the Canadian. Though tired and weak Sheridan refused to quit. Though first honours were lost to him he bravely hung on to second laurels.

"Mike Ryan almost tore second laurels from the grasp of the tired Sheridan. Mike, punishing himself to the limit, crawled up on Sheridan in the last four miles on the track. Entering the last stretch the Winged Fistiffe was in sight of the Canadian. Going to the whip, Mike tried his hardest in the last desperate drive to catch Sheridan. His lightning finish almost turned the trick, for the Irish American A.C. lad was beaten only about six yards by Sheridan.

VARSITY TEAM NOT LIKELY TO PLAY THE YALE CHAMPIONS

American Students Have Broken Training and According to the Toronto Star There is Little Probability of a Game Being Played.

The tail-end of the rugby season brings out any amount of absurd stories.

The latest is a post-season contest between Varsity and Yale for the "football championship of America."

Of course no such a game will take place, but it provides the dopesters with something to talk about and ponder over.

The Yale team broke training ten days ago when they beat Harvard, and there is no possibility of them playing Varsity or anybody else.

A FUTILE EFFORT

Three years ago, when Hamilton Tigers were at their best H. Griffith of Riders now of Varsity, Dr. A. B. Wright of Varsity and the writer attended the Yale-Harvard game on Yale field at New Haven and were authorised by the Hamilton club to negotiate for a game with Yale at New York, New Haven or Boston in private or in public, under Canadian or American rules to secure a game which would serve as a test of the relative merits of the two teams.

SPIKED BY WALTER CAMP

Walter Camp, the Yale director of athletics, spiked the proposition first crack out of the box. He said the Yale team would break training that night, and, furthermore, no game could be played that was not arranged the year before on the regular schedule of the team, as all games led by easy stages to the crucial test of the season—the Harvard match.

Hamilton offered to pay their own expenses and play in private on a week-day, but the offer was declined. It was the opinion of the Canadian delegates that the Tigers would have beaten Yale hands down, just as it is a sure thing that Varsity this year could beat the 1909 champion Yale team, that had not a point scored on it all season.

These American teams are very definite in the open game, and are especially weak behind the line owing to the insistent demand of the coaches for line-plunging and the undue emphasis put upon the value of possession of the ball.

ANOTHER PROPOSITION

There was a proposition made several weeks ago that two Canadian teams should go to Philadelphia on November 27 (last Saturday) and give an exhibition of our game in place of the Army-Navy contest, which has been cancelled owing to the death of Cadet Byrne.

The stipulation made was that Varsity shoulld be one of the teams, and it was the intention of the writer to secure Hamilton as opponents if possible so as to give the best exhibition of the Canadian game. However, owing to the ties that developed in the various Canadian unions it was not possible to secure an open date until after Dec. 4, and the Philadelphia promoters were notified to this effect.

VARSITY HASN'T HEARD OF IT

Since then there has been another agitation to send two Canadian teams to Philadelphia and Hamilton and Ottawa clubs have been asked to go, though it is Varsity that is really wanted. However, the collegians can't authority have heard of no definite go until the 11th, and so far those in proposition from any one.

Has Confessed to 27 Murders

St. Louis, Nov. 27.—Harry Orchard, who tied the dynamite bomb to Governor Steuenberg's gate at Caldwell, and on the witness stand confessed to twenty-seven murders, is still in the penitentiary, employed in the shoe shop, where he has become quite proficient at the trade. His sentence of death was commuted to life imprisonment by former Governor Gooding, although he insisted on being hanged, because, he argued, such a penalty was necessary for the expiation of his crimes and should be imposed in order to furnish an example and warning for others. Governor Gooding's reasons for commuting the sentence were to gratify public sentiment, and to keep Orchard as a witness against a man named Simpkins.

Simpkins has never been arrested, although a reward of $5,000 has been offered for him. Suspects are brought in periodically by zealous detectives, both professional and amateur, but they have never found the right man.

Orchard is a model prisoner and exercises a good influence, although few of the other prisoners will have anything to do with him, not because of his infamy, but because he is an informer. He occupies a very humiliating situation and talks frankly about it. He told me that he hoped to gain the respect and confidence of his fellow prisoners sooner or later, and admits that their antipathy to him is natural and justified. He considers himself the greatest of sinners and said that no humiliation or contempt could be too severe for his deserts. He is willing to bear everything and do everything in the way of atonement and expiation for his crimes. He is in a state of religious exaltation, like the penitents and zealots of the middle ages. Those who have had the best opportunity to watch him consider his conversion genuine and no sentimental interests affect public opinion. When his case came to the point of pardon or the penalty of death the people of Boise and that part of the state were entirely indifferent. They took no part in the discussion; they signed no petition, but let the Governor and the district Attorney settle the question without outside intervention.

A Religious Enthusiast.

Orchard is regarded as a psychological phenomenon and a religious enthusiast. He has organized a "praying band," in the prison, and holds prayer meetings daily, at which he and several other convicts who have become subject to his influence confess their sins and pray for forgiveness. Orchard was baptized into the Seventh Day Adventist church on July 21st last, when the preacher announced that his repentance was complete, and that his sins had been forgiven, but Orchard himself does not go so far as that.

He believes in the atonement, but sees that he must do something and suffer something himself in order to be sure of salvation. He wants to pay some penalty or furnish some evidence to show his repentance, and discussed at length the question whether he could atone for his guilt better by suffering death upon the gallows or by living a life of usefulness trying to reform criminals and other men of his class. It is a subject to which he has given a great deal of thought, and one that he does not consider himself competent to decide.

He shows the extraordinary memory that has been so much commented upon, and a high degree of intelligence. He has been subjected to repeated examinations by pyschological experts and has submitted cheerfully to all tests they have desired to apply. They have amused him rather than otherwise; but the doctors do not agree. Some of them give him credit for abnormal intellectual force.

Other students have come to the conclusion that Orchard is an example of "arrested development," that he is simple minded and harmless in his motives, without any natural viciousness, butsubject to the control of stronger wills, and that the twenty-seven murders to which he has confessed were committed under hypnotic influence. It is hard to accept such a theory after one has conversed with him a little while. He is self-possessed and seems to have absolute control of his faculties. He is frank and fearless and has a sense of humour.

Might Have Been Rich.

During the two trials in which he was the principal witness Orchard was subjected to a cross-examination as severe and relentless as any man ever endured, but he never lost his temper; he never contradicted himself; he was never confused; he never forgot a date and volunteered facts that had been forgotten by the people who were most interested in them. His general information is remarkable. Since he has been in prison he has frequently referred to events and incidents in the lives of visitors that had been forgotten by them.

Notwithstanding his confession and his evidence against the leaders of the miner's union, Orchard has not changed his views concerning the controversy between capital and labour. He is loyal to the organization.

He has two wives and families living, and both are devoted to him, although one of the wives has changed her name.

But for an extraordinary caprice of fate Orchard might be a millionaire to-day instead of a penitentiary convict. He formerly owned a one-fourth interest in the Hercules silver and lead mine up in the Coeur d'Alene country and sold it to a man named Paulson of Wallace for $300. Paulson now enjoys an income of more than $200,000 a year from his share in the property.

SUNDAY FUNERALS

Brantford Pastors Make a Move to Stop Them in Future.

Brantford, Ont., Dec. 2.—The Sunday funeral will soon be a thing of the past in Grantford. Local ministers have united in discouraging them, having passed a formal resolution at the Ministerial Alliance. Copies of the resolution are now in the hands of all undertakers, who are asked to co-operate. The City Council will also be requested to close cemeteries on Sundays. The ground of appeals is that ministers have too strenuous duties on Sundays and that cemetery employees should not be required to work.

SORE THROAT

Slight colds become more offensive and sickening every day. The inflammation extends further into the head, soon the ears begin to buzz and ring, the head aches, the eyes pain dreadfully, the nose gets plugged up, and this forces the patient to breathe through the mouth. Vile, filthy secretions are forced back into the throat, requiring a great deal of coughing to keep the air passages free. Finally, this foul matter finds its way into the stomach, causing dyspepsia and general ill-health. By this time the patient has SYSTEMIC CATARRH, which sap strength, depletes the vital energies till Consumption is the usual result.

BEGINNING OF THE FRAY

Premier's Daughter Will Be a Feature In the Coming Campaign—If People Do Not Support the Government Now They Will Lose the Privileges Won by Their Forefathers at So Great a Cost.

London, Dec. 2.—The National Liberal Federation last night issued a manifesto to the country, which may be regarded as a party rally for the elections. It concentrates attention entirely on the constitutional struggle between the House of Lords, and the House of Commons. It says:

"If the present action of the peers is not repudiated swiftly by the people, the rights and privileges won so dearly by our forefathers in the great struggles for freedom are all surrendered."

The manifesto declares that the peers' power of veto must be restricted, so that the last word on legislation and finance must rest with the House of Commons. Otherwise, no Liberal Ministry can again assume the responsibility of office.

"In the fight forced upon us," the manifesto continues, "the electors will have to decide whether they wish to govern themselves, or be governed at second hand by a few hundred hereditary peers who have thrown the constitution into the melting pot in order to shift the burden of taxation from wealth, land and liquor to food and the necessaries of life."

Lord Rosebery, in a letter to the press last night, repudiates the charge made by Lord Curzon, that he led an army to the walls of a fortress, and then abandoned it. Lord Rosebery reiterates that throughout he has opposed and warned against, the course the Lords have taken, as one calculated injuriously to affect the House of Lords itself, and enhance what popularity the budget may possess.

Miss Asquith as Campaigner.

London, Dec. 2.—Even before the Government has announced on its program of campaign women folk of the Cabinet Ministers' families are beginning to show their active interest in the coming struggle.

Miss Violet Asquith, the Prime Minister's daughter, is determined to make herself a valuable asset to the Liberal party. She has made her debut as a political speaker and proved herself to possess remarkable eloquence and a charming platform manner. She is decidedly opposed to the militant suffragette policy.

Miss Asquith has opened a Liberal bazaar at Hammersmith, a western suburb of London, where in a eulogy of the work of the Liberal Government she said:

"They have resurrected the army, united South Africa and given the Utopian boon of old-age pensions, which some of us had relegated to the millennium. Now we are Crusaders outside the walls of the Holy City."

This was a reference to the Liberal Government's attack on the strongholds of wealth and privilege.

Goes Home to Jail.

New York, Dec. 2.—"When I go back to England," said Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, the militant little English suffragette, yesterday. "I am going to serve 30 days in jail with 90 others, and I shall tell you now that there will be another 'hunger strike.' We shall refuse to eat the prison food, not because of the sort of food it is, but because we think this a good method to gain our end. If any of us die in prison, heaven help the Government candidates at the general election.

Pay Fine or Go to Prison.

London, Dec. 2.—The Divisional Court yesterday denied the appeal of Miss Cristabel Pankhurst and Mrs. Haverfield, sentenced to pay a fine of $25 each or to go to prison for a month on the charge of resisting the police. The women were arrested June 30, along with 114 other suffragettes, who had attempted to force their way into the House of Commons to present a petition to Premier Asquith.

Apologize to Bishop.

Montreal, Dec. 2.—The reverend gentlemen of the College of Ste. Marie, De Manoitl, County of Rouville, who established their college against the wishes of the Bishop-manager Berard of St. Hyacinthe, at St. Johns, Que., have finally made an amende honorable because of their disobedience.

Toronto as a Capital City.

Ottawa, Dec. 2.—Medill McCormack, publisher of The Chicago Tribune, who is in Ottawa, establishing a Tribune bureau, says that if Canada and the United States ever merge, Toronto should make just as good a capital for the new nation as Washington does for the U.S.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

Andrew H. Myine of Dunnville lost his life in a fire which destroyed his residence about two o'clock yesterday morning. He lived alone.

Ministers of Port Arthur and Fort William are not in favor of a visit of Carrie Nation, the saloon smasher, who wanted to go and lecture under the auspices of the W.C.T.U.

King Manuel of Portugal and President Fallieres hunted yesterday at Rambouillet. They killed 650 head of game. In the evening they saw "Love Watches" at the Comedio Francaise.

The 43rd Regiment of Ottawa will probably go in for snowshoeing and skeeing this winter. Unless the winter proves a very open one, there will be a number of marches on snowshoes by the regiment.

The train service on C.P.R. is being re-established and the first train to reach Vancouver since last Saturday's storm arrived at 7.30 o'clock last night. It was closely followed by two others of the stalled westbound trains.

There will be a reduction in the rate of postage on parcels between Canada and Jamaica, from 20 to 12 cents per pound, the limit of weight for one parcel being 11 pounds. The postage rate on parcels passing between Canada and Trinidad has also been reduced from 16 to 12 cents per pound.

Victuallers Favor Reduction.

Montreal, Dec. 2.—The Montreal licensed victuallers met yesterday and adopted a radical and progressive policy as regards the sale of strong liquor. Lawrence A. Wilson was chosen president and he would only accept upon condition that his new policy should be adopted.

This policy favors the gradual reduction of liquor licenses in Montreal, the reductions to be left entirely with the commissioners. Notice of at least three years to every cafe or saloon and five years to a hotel is recommended. He maintained also that there should be a law of compensation for those forfeiting their licenses.

The new policy also favors the classifying of licenses in cafes, restaurants and hotels, and to have the jurisdiction of the commissioners to extend all over the Island of Montreal, club license for the city to be obtained in the regular way and approved of by the Government. The president, however, opposed the early closing movement.

Want Legislation Stopped.

Ottawa, Dec. 2.—Mr. R. G. Hutchins, jr., representing N. W. Harris & Co. of New York, who hold six millions of the bonds of the Dominion Power & Transportation Co. of Hamilton, was in Ottawa yesterday to see Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and urged the Dominion Government to disallow the hydro-electric legislation of the Ontario Government tending for the establishment of a Government power enterprise, which would, he said, very seriously interfere with the security of the investments in private power undertakings established without expectation that there would be Government competition and a radical interference with vested interests.

Sir Wilfrid stated that the question had already been brought to the consideration of the Government by various deputations recently in Ottawa.

Crushed to Death.

Toronto, Dec. 2.—While excavating in a pit of the Don Valley Brick Yards yesterday afternoon, John Latham, aged 28, was instantly killed by a mass of blue clay which gave way and rolled down into the pit, crushing his head.

Dr. Britton, coroner, made an investigation of the circumstances and decided that an inquest was unnecessary. Latham leaves a wife and two children.

Fined for Theft.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Dec. 2.—James Armstrong, William Watts and Harry Putney, all Michigan Central Railway employes, arrested and charged with robbing cars in the yards at Bridgeburg, were before Magistrate Rathven yesterday and fined $5 and costs. They promised to make restitution to the company. Ernest Finlayson, charged with receiving stolen property, got off with the same sentence.

Maurice Woodlee, formerly M.C.R. night yardman at Bridgeburg; John Kee, fireman, son of Chief of Police Kee; Chester Lawson, son of the collector of customs, and R. S. Girvin, M.C.R. checker, were committed for trial at Welland on the same charge. J. O'Neill, former yardmaster, charged with stealing seven cars of crushed stone from the company, and Burns, charged with returning a false payroll, will also be tried at Welland.

U. S. Army Recommendations.

Washington, Dec. 2.—Many changes in the military establishment were suggested yesterday by United States Secretary of War Dickinson in his annual report to the President, among them the following:

The division of the United States into territorial and tactical districts so that the organized militia of the states may be practically combined with the regular army stationed therein.

The location of troops in or near the principal cities of the United States, instead of distributing them at remote forts, to meet the three requirements of economy, possibility of rapid movement, and the training of the militia.

Encouragement of rifle practice among the citizens and school boys.

G.T.R. Is Welcomed by Providence.

Providence, R.I., Dec. 2.—The Board of Trade have endorsed the effort that is now being made by the Grand Trunk Railway to secure entrance to this city and have voted to render the railway any possible assistance.

CAPT. SCOLLARD HONOURED BY HIS BUFFALO FRIENDS

Popular Captain of the Steamer Stoney Lake Was the Guest of Hit and Miss Club Last Week at a Banquet.

SERVICES APPRECIATED

Capt. Wm. Scollard of the steamer Stony Lake, was the guest last week of the Hit or Miss Club, a Buffalo fishing and hunting organization, who have been coming over to the Kawartha Lakes for a number of years in the summer and autumn, and who have always been looked after by the genial Captain. He was entertained at a banquet, and during the evening was presented with an elegant suitcase as a mark of appreciation from the Club for his many services to them. The Buffalo Express says of the gathering:

Not since State Committeeman John Grimm and his fellows of the Hit or Miss Club got ashore after many thrilling hours in a houseboat six miles from land on the stormy bosom of Lake Nipissing, a year ago, have the hearts of the venturesome company been more gay and joyous than they were last night, when this same merry band of pleasure-seekers gathered at dinner at Billy Tenjost's:

"Hurrah for Stony Lake and a real steamboat!" was one of the toasts proposed. It was drunk and applauded with zest.

After the experience on Nippissing where the Hit or Miss Club had spent several outings in former years, none of the members were keen for a jaunt to that particular part of the Canadian wilds. So this year came a change in the destination, and the members spent their two-week November outing in the Kawartha lakes district.

Since their return to Buffalo, two weeks ago, they had not met until last night. Billy Scollard, captain of the steamer Stony Lake, which had taken them in safety and comfort across that lake, going to and from the haunts of the deer and the fox and—yes, the wolves—was in town as the guest of Billy Tenjost, and the club made him the guest of honour at its feast.

The company included these—every one of whom had been on the trip:

John Grimm, Jr., Fred O. Murray, collector of customs in Buffalo; Dr. John T. Claris, Assessor-elect John C. Beta, Alderman Edward Sperry, John P. Diebold, William Landefeldt, Henry Heinecke, Joseph Miller, Philip Klipfel, Fred Mumm, William Tenjost, Edward C. Beck, Gus Meyer, John Dittman, J. George Haffa, John Beimann and Dr. Jacob Miller, V. H. Bradish, deputy collector of customs.

The last two didn't belong till this year's outing. They were initiated during the trip, and a wilder, merrier maddar initiation never was. It took away the breath of Police Justice Si Nash's guide, who shows the judge "whar t' ketch th' biggest muskies," and who happened along with a gun over his shoulder when he sighted the masked and false moustached figures that took part in the initiation.

"I thought I'd run up agin a band o' Injuns," the guide wrote the judge a day or two ago, "but I soon see most of 'em was too fat for real warriess."

Roast wild duck, apple sauce, and other things dear to the stomachs of the Hit or Miss members were mere incidents to the real pleasure of reassembling and reminiscing.

After they had recalled many a prank and practical joke and harassed its victim by dwelling on it, had swapped stories and viewed the snapshot taken by Fred Murray and Ed. Sperry during the trip, a reporter happened in and wanted to know:

"On the dead level, boys, how many of those deer strung up in the pictures did you shoot yourselves?"

The skeptical eyes of the questioner were turned full on John Grimm, the hero of many of the club's previous epiwgins. Big, honest John's face flushed as he answered resolutely:

"We didn't have a gun in our party."

Decrease In Permits During The Past Month

November has witnessed another slump in the total of the building permits issued at the City Clerk's office. October's totals showed a decrease when compared with the same month last year, and comparing November, 1908, with the past month there is a falling off to the amount of $10,250. In spite of this fact there is considerable building activity and advantage is being taken of the prolonged good weather which it is believed, by some, will not be terminated for a few weeks yet.

November, 1908, saw building permits issued to the amount of $25,625, while the following list, totalling $15,275 is the record for the past month.

C. Bribois, brick dwelling, Sophia street, $1,000.

NATURE TELLS YOU

As Many a Peterborough Reader Knows Too Well.

When the kidneys are sick,
Nature tells you all about it.
The urine is nature's calendar.
Infrequent or too frequent action;
Any urinary trouble tells of kidney ills.

Booth's Kidney Pills cure all kidney ills.

Peterborough people testify to this.

Mrs. T. DeRusia, of Mary and Bethune street, Peterborough, Ont., says, "I believe Booth's Kidney Pills a remedy of exceptional merit in quickly relieving backache caused from disordered kidneys. I frequently suffered with a dull, heavy pain in the small of my back. It would extend around my sides and into my shoulders. Headaches were frequent and often accompanied by spells of dizziness. Booth's Kidney Pills were recommended by a friend and I procured a box at McDermid & Jury's Pharmacy. I soon found them to relieve me, I have had no trouble since and can credit this only to Booth's Kidney Pills."

IS CHARGED WITH PERJURY

Young Man Said to Have Sworn Falsely in Connection With Recent Police Court Case—Arraigned This Morning.

CASE WAS ENLARGED

A well konwn local man was arrested by P. C. Newhall this morning and arraigned before Magistrate Dumble on a charge of perjury, alleged to have been committed while giving evidence in a recent case in the police court. Mr. D. O'Connell appeared on behalf of the accused and did not plead or elect. The case was enlarged until Monday morning next. The defendant was admitted to bail of one thousand dollars in two sureties of $250 and his own of five hundred dollars.

ELECTED OFFICERS

At the conclusion of the week-night service at St. Luke's church last evening, a meeting of the choir was held. It was decided to practice every Wednesday evening. Rev. Dr. Langfeldt was elected president and Miss Ruby Quartermaine, secretary-treasurer. A visiting committee consisting of Misses L. Stewart and Ruby Quartermaine and Messrs Harry Wickendon and Harry Moore was appointed to look after members who absented themselves from rehearsal.

REEVE FIFE HAS GOOD RECORD

Councillor Five Years and Reeve During Same Length of Time—Elected Seven Times by Acclamation—Three Member of County Council.

NEVER MISSED A MEETING

With the closing of the present session of the County Council, Mr. John Fife, Reeve of Otonabee, and a member of the Council, will likely retire from the municipal activities of the township. To an Examiner reporter to-day he would not say anything definite in this connection, but from his statements it is not likely that he will come out again for the reeveship of Otonabee. Mr. Fife has a splendid record in the township's municipal life in which he has always taken a deep interest. Ten years ago he was first elected Councillor and has been on the Council in that position and as Reeve continuously up to the present. He was Councillor for five years, Reeve for five years, and member of the County Council during the past three years. He was elected by acclamation on seven occasions, three times as councillor and four times as reeve. Last year he was opposed by Mr. W. J. Porter for the latter position, and was returned by a safe majority. This record evidences the confidence Mr. Fife has enjoyed from the electors of Otonabee. Mr. Fife was not inclined to talk about his experiences in Council life. He said, however, that it was a pleasure to represent the people of Otonabee on the County Council and the Township Council has always been conducted harmoniously. Mr. Fife has never missed a Council meeting during the ten years he has spent on the Township Council. He is Chairman of the Bridges and Buildings Committee of the County Council.

THE LETTERS ARE UNSIGNED

The Examiner Has Received a Number of Anonymous Communication on Subject of Local Option Matters.

WILL NOT BE PRINTED

The Examiner has received an anonymous postcard dealing with the local option question, but as there has been no name signed to the communication it is, of course, impossible that it should be printed. A number of such letters and cards have been received by the Examiner during the past few days and the public should understand that they will not be printed unless signed by the writer and furthermore, that any communication dealing with the issue, either for or against the local option movement, must be paid for the usual advertising rates through the respective committees. Therefore, persons who send in letters without complying with these conditions are wasting their own time and that of the staff of the Examiner, as they will not be published.

GIVEN SOME ADVICE AND ALLOWED TO GO ON SUSPENDED SENTENCE

Thomas Jenkins Was Charged in Court To-day With Having Wounded Willie Sullivan With a Jackknife—Resides in Smith.

CUT BOY'S WRIST

Thomas Jenkins, a young man who appeared before Magistrate Dumble on Monday, charged with drawing a knife on Willie Sullivan, on Saturday night last, and was remanded, came up again this morning. He pleaded not guilty and on Monday elected to be tried by a jury, but this morning changed his election to summary trial. Crown Attorney R. E. Wood conducted the prosecution. After hearing the evidence his Worship administered some good sound advice and allowed him to go on suspended sentence.

Willie Sullivan, fifteen years of age, called, stated that on Saturday last he was at the corner of Brock and George streets, about 7 p. m. Andy Sullivan was with him. The prisoner, who was a stranger to the witness, was standing there, too. Sullivan noticed mud on the man's coat and he told him he would brush it off. Witness went to brush it off, when prisoner said: "Don't come fooling around me," and he turned and hit Sullivan with the knife on the wrist. Witness then ran away. The prisoner was the worse of liquor.

Andrew Sullivan was with the last witness on Saturday evening. He corroborated what Sullivan said in regard to the affair.

Mr. George Edmondson, of Smith, stated that the prisoner had worked for him for five years. His conduct was good. One wouldn't wish for better.

TO DISSOLVE PARLIAMENT

London, Dec. 2.—Premier Asquith announced in the house of commons to-day that the government had advised King Edward to dissolve parliament, and that his Majesty had accepted the advice. The Premier added that if the Liberals were returned to power, the first account of the government would be the re-enactement of all the taxes for which provision was made in the budget rejected by the house of lords.

Mr. Lastar's Manuscripts May Be Seen

The Examiner is in receipt of the original manuscripts of all Mr. Lastar's letters, which have appeared in print, and which have been left at this office for the purpose of allowing "The Literary Critic" of the committee appointed by him to inspect. These letters are available at any time during business hours, and may be seen by any one who wishes to do so. It is learned that "Critic" will be unable to take up this matter for a day or two, but will do so at his earliest convenience. It will, however likely be some time next week before the affair is finished.

DISTRICT CONVENTION

The district convention of District No. 7 of the Knights of Maccabees, is being held in the Foresters' Hall, Simcoe street. There are about 20 delegates in attendance from places between Tweed and Myrtle, and between Trenton and Orillia. Provincial Commander S. W. Trussler, of Camlachie, is presiding, and Deputy Commander Joseph Jenkins, of Detroit, is also present.

NEPHEW AN AUTHOR

The following editorial clipping from the ArgusLeader of Sioux Falls, South Dakota, refers to Mr. John Percy Edmison, a nephew of County Police Magistrate Edmison, of this city. He is the son of Mr. P. H. Edmison, the younger brother of Magistrate Edmison:

"The Argus-Leader has received from the Penn. Publishing Co., with the compliments of the author, a copy of 'Stories from the Norseland,' by John Percy Edmison, a former resident of Sioux Falls, but for several years past the associate editor of the St. Paul Pioneer Press. Mr. Edmison is a son of P. H. Edmison, of this city, and his many friends here will be pleased to learn of the growth he has been making since he graduated from Yale with high honours.

"The volume is part of a classic series for boys and girls, and the contribution which Mr. Edmison has made to the series, is likely to give him a desirable place among the students and writers of the United States. The author has undertaken to tell in simple, but graphic, language, the old legends of the Norseman, and, in his pages, we are put on terms of the most delightful intimacy with dwarfs and giants, and feats of heroism and magic. He has succeeded admirably in putting the red blood of the present day into the mythology of the Northland. There are 337 pages of the book, which is skillfully illustrated and nicely bound."

WHY SO SLOW?

Chief Roszel Offers Assistance to Those Who Intend Laying Charges of Perjury Against Policemen.

Chief Roszel wishes to state that if those persons who are talking of laying charges of perjury against Police Constables Newhall and Meharry in connection with a recent police court case would come to the city clerk's office, they would find plenty of information blanks with which to do so. And he further states that if perjury was committed by a policeman on his staff he would be glad to have it investigated. He hopes that the ones who are talking will either take action or be quiet.

CHASED WILDCAT WITH GUNS AND DOG

Exciting Hunt on Smith Farm Last Night — Posse of Four Men Enjoyed Fine Sport in the Moonlight—About Thirty Shots Fired at the Animal, Which Finally Got Away.

HIT SEVERAL TIMES

Suggestive of the days when the country was only sparsely settled and the wild animals, then plentiful and daring, roamed about almost undisturbed, is the story that comes from Smith township last night relating in detail an exciting chase after a wild cat. The affair happened on Mr. W. A. Stabler's farm on the 15th lot of the 7th concession of the township and furnished grand sport for the men who hunted the animal for more than two hours in the swamp that constitutes a portion of the farm. A number of cattle had been butchered during the day and its supposed the wild cat was attracted by the scent of the blood and came to feed upon the refuse that had not been disposed of and was thrown out behind the barn. At any rate the people in the house heard a loud cry about nine o'clock and from its nature rightly divinded that a wild cat was in the vicinity. Messrs. Fred and Nathan Stabler and Fred and William Hurd constituted the party that took up the chase when the cat was discovered in the field at the rear.

The men had two revolvers between them and on the first fusilade the cat took to the swamp with a dog at its heels but at a respectable distance. It was freed several times and in the bright moonlight the posse had two hours' fun that surpassed anything experienced before in the hunting line. The dog followed closely and enabled the men to keep within striking distance. Several times it seemed to have been hit, but it came back strong every time it appeared to have been cornered. Around the swamp the chase was continued until almost midnight, when the animal found its way into a corner of the swamp and could not be located. The night was such an ideal one to be out of doors that the experience was doubly enjoyed. The wild cat would turn upon the dog, at times, hissing loudly and ready to fight but although the men were following closely seldom could they get near enough to secure a good shot. They saw the cat often enough, but a tree or stump generally obstructed.

However, the men with the "six-shooters" took all kinds of chances to drop the wild cat and sobut thirty shots were fired. The men expected to find it dead this morning, as they are confident they "winged" it more than once.

THE FIRES WERE INCENDIARY SAYS JURY IN GUTHRIE CASE

Special to The Examiner.

Barrie, Dec. 2.—"That the jury is of the opinion that the fires were of incendiary origin, and that some member of the Guthrie household was responsible, and further that it is necessary that further enquiry should be made by the Crown."

The above is the verdict of the jury in the Guthrie fire investigation after considering the evidence for thirty-five minutes. No new evidence was adduced to-day, except that of Mrs. Gofton, who lived next door, and who stated she had never known of a Miss Weeks.

Southern Evangelist To Be At St. Andrew's Church Sunday

Next Sunday morning the Rev. Sam. W. Small, the famous Southern Evangelist, journalist, author and lecturer will preach at the morning service.

Sam Small, who for some years was associated with Sam Jones, in his world-wide evangelistic mission is a born orator.

The New York Herald speaks of him as a "Magnetic Master of Assemblies." The Washington Post says: There are not a half a dozen men in the country who are equal to him in popular power as a public speaker."

Dr. Samuel W. Small is a man of exceptional attainments. He was educated by private tutors and finally graduated with high honours from Emory and Henry College in Virginia. He holds the literary degree of B.A. and M.A. and is a Ph.D. from Tayler University.

Dr. Small was attached to the staff of General Bates and Wilson in their military service in Cuba, and was United States delegate to the International Literary congress in Paris in 1878. After leaving college he studied law and was admitted to the bar by the Supreme Court of Tennessee and was then called to become private secretary to ex-President Andrew Jackson.

Dr. Sam Small is a member of numerous societies, being a Mason, an Oddfellow, one of the oldest of the Knights of Pythias. In 1898 President McKinley tendered him the chaplaincy of the third regiment of United State Volunteer Engineers and as such Small served in the Cuban campaign and subsequently as a staff officer in the work of reconstructing the island government.

Dr. Sam Small will lecture in St. Andrew's church on Monday night at 8 o'clock on "The Woman that God Made." A generous silver collection is asked for.

LECTURES TO NURSES

On Use and Care of the Teeth by Dr. W. C. Gowan, D.D.S

Lectures of a kind not hitherto provided for nurses in training have recently been delivered at Nicholls Hospital and St. Joseph's Hospital by W. C. Gowan, D.D.S

Dr Gowan was appointed by the Education committee of the Ontario Dental Society to consult the wishes of those in authority in the hospitals, respecting instructions for nurses in regard to the teeth, their proper use and care, disease most common to teeth, its results and means for its prevention.

The suggestion was thankfully accepted by the authorities of both hospitals and the lectures were well received by the nurses. Ample notes and directions, for reference, were prepared by Dr. Gowan and supplied to each hospital.

Representative members of the dental profession conceive it a duty to place within reach of all as large number as possible such plain information and directions as may assist in the prevention of decay of the teeth and the suffering and injury directly and indirectly due to neglect of the mouth.

No funds for this purpose being available, those who take part in the work contribute their time and labour for the advancement of this important though much neglected part of education.

Recent improvement in scientific knowledge has enabled those who study the matter to give instruction and directions which, if followed, will to a large extent prevent decay of the teeth and consequent injury to the general health.

Lifebuoy Soap is delightfully refreshing for bath or toilet. For washing under clothing it is unequalled. Cleanses and purifies.

THE RETIRING INSPECTOR.

Through the re-arrangement of the school inspection districts of this vicinity, Mr. Wright, of Victoria, and Mr. J. Coyle Brown, of Peterborough, inspectors, have resigned. Mr. Brown has well earned the leisure, and it is hoped, enjoyment, which his retired will bring him. He has been in harness thirty-seven years continuously. He has, in the course of his thousands of visits to the schools of the county, travelled hundreds of thousands of miles, and has had under his official cognizance children who have in the nearly forty years o this term of office become fathers and mothers and even grandfathers and grandmothers to the children that have come within the closing years of his inspectorate. Mr. Brown is perhaps personally known to more individuals in the County of Peterborough than any politician in any county in Canada. As widely as he is known is he respected.

THE DISAPPEARING PEERS.

That the rejection of the Lloyd-George budget by the House of Lords is a case of high caste hari-kari is the general opinion of those whose opinion is entitled to weight. It is turning back the deal with a vengeance. The London Chronicle declares that the action of the hereditary chamber has brought the people of Great Britain face to face with a graver crisis than any since the revolution of 1648. It is likely to have more serious consequences in one way. In the revolution of 1648 King Charles only lost his head; in the crisis of 1909 it is certain that 619 hereditary heads will drop into the basket. The action of the Lords revives the struggle of privilege with constitutional government, puts a new hereditary rule against the rule of the people. The struggle precipitated by the blind action of the lords can end only one way. The liberties and rights fought for centuries, will be maintained. The doom of the lords does not bean the abolition of the second chamber, but it means its popularization. The budget will not be the only issue in the impending elections; the budget butchers have embodied another. The last division in the house of lords may literally be the last—a dissolving view if a great and august, self-effaced body.

WARDEN SCOTT'S RETIREMENT.

The announcement of Mr. Warden Scott, in his address at the opening of the present session of the County Council, that he intended to withdraw at the end of the present term, forecasts the removal from participation in active municipal politics of a gentlemen who has given valuable services in a representative capacity for several years. For over seven years Mr. Scott has been a member of the township council of Smith, and for more than five years a member of the County Council, having been elected for four terms reeve by acclamation, a tribute both to his popularity and efficiency of service. Mr. Scott, whether as reeve, county councillor, or warden, has always been active and alert in the discharge of his duties, fair and considerate to all with whom his official and personal relations have brought him into contact. These characteristics seem to have influenced him in yielding to one of the reasons that influence his retirement—his desire to be fair and not monopolize a position whose honour he has enjoyed with modesty and whose responsibilities he has discharged with credit. It can be said of Mr. Scott that in retiring he does so with full enjoyment of the confidence of his constituents and colleagues and of their respect, as well as that of the public.

MUTUAL OFFENCES.

We are informed by an associated press despatch that the directors of the Canadian National Exhibition, Toronto, are asking the British Admiralty to loan them torpedo destroyers, submarines, etc., to form an exhibition feature of attraction. The Globe, in deprecation of the proposal, quotes the provisions of the Rush-Bagot treaty of 1817—a convention between the United States and Great Britain, which provided for keeping armed vessels of considerable strength out of the lakes between the two countries, the permissable armed crafts being limited to four, on either side on all the great international lakes none to be of a tonnage greater than 100 tons, with an armament confined to one eighteen-pound gun. The presence of the British torpedo destroyers, etc., in Toronto Bay for mere purposes of exhibition—belching forth nothing more perilous than blank discharges, may be a technical contravention of the treaty, but, by consent, be nothing more serious than mutually tolerated invasion of Canada and the United States, represented by exchange visit of holidaying military corps. But, unless Hon. Mr. Foster set off blank cartridges in the House of Commons yesterday afternoon, the United States is more seriously contravening the provisions of the Rush-Bagot treaty than would be done by the holiday manoeuvres of torpedo destroyers and the diving of submarines, exploited for mere purposes of amusement. Mr. Foster, in moving for correspondence "in respect to the agreement between Great Britain and the United States for the maintenance of war vessels on the Great Lakes," gave a list of war craft maintained on these lakes by the United States, numbering ten, with a combined tonnage of 8,000 tons, an armament of 246 quick-firing guns, and with 30 officers and 549 men. Under these circumstances, will the Globe think that Uncle Sam can have the "cheek" to object to the holiday squib cracking of British war craft, as an adjunct to a prise pumpkin exhibit.

PRAYERS AND POLITICS.

The Montreal Witness thinks that if the Liberals of Ontario act upon the advice of Mayor Oliver of Toronto, and adopt the abolition of the bar as a plank in their platform, there is good reason to believe that this would prevail throughout the province. Possibly, but not probably. It is more than likely that the plank would be found sawed nearly through on the under side, according to a mark made by a party line. Experience has shown that the electors as a body do not vote as they pray; that is, that their moral convictions so outstanding in convention and conventicle are swallowed up by their party enthusiasm when the test of the ballot is applied—engorged as the rods in the Pharoic snake-swallowing incident. The electors in the capacity of citizens will talk temperance, pray temperance, and probably practice temperance, but the citizen as an elector, as a rule, votes the straight party ticket. This is the way things have worked in the past. In this very country, in an election, the two party candidates were required by numerous electors regardless of party, to declare themselves upon the temperance question. One candidate took the pledge and the other took a drink. One took a decided stand in the interests of temperance, and the other espoused the cause of the bar. One was applauded as heartily as the other was condemned; but, when it came to the voting, the electors wheeled into party line, and the temperance candidate did not get half a dozen votes from the political opponents on the head of his avowed and decided stand on temperance. If those who professed to be on that side had voted as they prayed, their temperance champion would have been elected for, as it was, he was only defeated by sixteen votes. A dozen electors voting for conscience sake, and not under party compulsion, would have elected him. In the last provincial general election in this province, one party condemned the Government attitude on local option and posed as the champions of fair voting—fair play to the temperance movement; that party was snowed under at the polls, and the party that fettered, strangled and handicapped local option as to the effective operation of its machinery, triumphed greatly. It is true as the Witness indicates that at present the tide of temperance runs high, but let an election come, and, judging by the past the tide of party will run higher. Even economic considerations that have become allied with moral element in reform and restraint of drinking customs will probably succumb to party influence: it is not to be supposed that business advantages will influence action that has not been and probably will not again, be amenable to claims of conscience. Lopping off the branches of a tree does not necessarily destroy it. The only way is to strike at the root. So long as strong drink is manufactured and so long as human nature remains human nature, the evil of intemperance, the use of intoxicants, will prevail, though restraint by legal enactment, moral influences, development of public character, may, as it has already done, have very notable effects.

MUSIC AND DRAMA.

BILLY.

There was nearly another fatality to mark to the credit of American football last night when fourteen hundred people almost laughed themselves to death because the hero of "Billy," Mrs. Sidney Drew's farce got himself in the way of somebody's boot in a football game and lost four of his teeth. The accident furnishes the story of one of the funniest farces ever seen here and the largest audience of the season at the Grand Opera House found the comedy a mint of humour. From the first curtain until the final it was one continuous storm of laughter and the good ship "Florida" was several times almost capsized by the hilarity of the audience. It does not seem possible that such amusement could be produced from such a prosaic article as a set of false teeth, but Mrs. Drew has woven such a series of funny situations around the "grinders" that there is never a dull moment in the action.

All the scenes are laid on the steamer Florida upon which "Billy" Hargreaves, the hero, is a passenger bound for Havanna, where he is going to allow himself to get accustomed to a set of false teeth which he has been forced to secure owing to an accident in the football game. He is very sensitive about his misfortune and tries to hide it from the eyes of his friends. To his surprise he finds among the passengers the girl he hopes to marry, her mother and his rival. Urged on by his sister, who accompanies him he is about to confess to the girl that his teeth are false when a sailor lurches up against him and the cause of all the trouble are lost on the deck. Billy is placed hors de combat in the courtship race. He is unable to talk to anyone without his teeth and his rival takes advantage of his condition to press his own suit. Billy goes prowling around the deck in the early morning in the hope of recovering his lost teeth and finds another set in the window of a stateroom which he confiscates. They turn out to be the property of the mother of the girl he loves and her predicament is even worse than his. However, Billy's teeth are picked up by a sailor and sold by auction to raise money for the Sailors' Home. Billy instructs his sister to buy them and after some spirited bidding with Billy's rival she secures the teeth.

Billy substitutes Mrs. Sloane's for his, hands them to Beatrice's mother, thereby winning her gratitude, slips his own into his mouth, smiles contentedly as he murmurs "Beatrice" for the first time since he lost them, and everything ends happily.

Mr. Edward Atchison-Ely in the title role and Miss Jane Marbury as Billy's sister were the stars of the excellent cast and were deliciously funny in their work. Spottswoode Aitken gave a a clever portrayal of a boatswain and the other roles were carefully looked after. The scenic effects were out of the ordinary, the action taking place on the deck of a steamer and the effect was very realistic. The scenery and cast was the same as in the all summer run of the production at Daly's theatre, New York.

GAVE AN ADDRESS

From Farm and Dairy.

Mr. W. C. Waid, New Carlisle, Ohio, gave an address on "Greenhouse Growing of Vegetables," at the convention of the Ontario Vegetable Growers' Association. Development in this line has taken place during the last twenty-five years. As a rule vegetable growing under glass has been remunerative. Mostly lettuce, cucumbers and tomatoes are thus grown. An increase in the number of the vegetables forced is probable.

The soil in the forcing house is seldom renewed, but well-rotted manure is added each year. The speaker spreads manure over the soil and uses a sprinkler system of watering in order to extract the fertility for the use of the plants. Sterilising the soil is sometimes necessary when disease has been present the previous season. The overhead system of watering is best, but sub-irrigation has given good results with lettuce, and radishes. The higher the temperature, other things being equal, the more rapid the growth, but the greater the risk of disease. Good ventilation is a requisite.

Her Daughter Took Very Sick As Result Of Catching Cold.

Mrs. Dennis Delaney, Friar's Head, N.S., writes: "At the close of the year 1907, our youngest daughter, five years old, took very sick as the result of catching cold. She became very weak and could not move around at all. We consulted doctors and gave her various kinds of medicine but they did not seem to relieve her any. On the advice of a friend I procured a bottle of your valuable remedy, Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, and after using the first bottle noticeable improvement was the result and after using three bottles she was entirely cured. I can certify that it was through your valuable remedy that she regained her strength and would advise every mother having young ones similarly afflicted to obtain your valuable remedy. For myself I would not be without a bottle in the house."

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup contains all the lung healing virtues of the Norway pine tree combined with Wild Cherry bark and other pectoral remedies. It has stood the test for many years, and is now more generally used than ever. Price 25 cents at all dealers. Manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Tories Not Ready To Proceed With Motions Cause Delay

Order Paper in the House of Commons Crowded With Tory Motions, But When They are Called the Members Ask That They Stand---Government is Not to Blame---Foster Presents Misleading Figures.

WHAT LAURIER PROMISED

The Prime Minister made two very important announcements last week before large and influential deputations.

First, he stated that the Government were alive to the necessity of improving our national waterways.

Second, that the Welland Canal should be deepened, and the work commenced without delay.

Third, that the Georgian Bay Canal must be constructed, as the commerce of the Great Lakes demanded this additional outlet.

A close observer of what occurs in Parliament will notice some curious doings. The Opposition express the hope at every opportunity, that the business of the House will be expedited and the Sessions shortened. Very good. How does this work out? When question time comes hours are wasted in answering questions which members of the Opposition place on the order paper, and from the character of the questions no possible public interest is served by the great expense in preparing the answer or the time consumed in reading the answer.

Another Way.

Then when the time comes to call the motions which Conservatives have placed upon the order paper, every man calls out—"Stands"—and not being ready to proceed with the motion of which they have given notice, causes further delay in the public business.

This is another method of delaying public business for which the Opposition may be held responsible.

A Third Way of Obstructing.

Then again when the Government took up the resolution to ratify the French treaty, the Opposition objected, and wanted to wait and see what course the United States Government would take with regard to it. Mr. Fielding promptly told the House that Canada would proceed with its commercial bargains irrespective of what the United States or any other nation thought.

Foster on Extravagance.

When the House was moved into committee of supply Mr. Foster delayed public business while he rehashed his story of extravagance.

Mr. Foster has a long tongue, but a short memory. The burden of his song was the great increase in the number of civil servants, and consequent heavy charge on the Government. He thought there were too many men employed by the Government. His words were:

How He Exaggerates.

"No man can convince me that it is necessary that $5,000,000, or anything near it, should be spent in order to get a fair and effective service in the offices and departments here in Ottawa."

To illustrate the unreliable character of the man, and how far astray an elector would be in placing confidence in his figures, consider the following: Mr. Foster stated to the House that civil government would cost $4,703,707. Commenting on this he said:

What He Said.

"Now, I say it is absolutely startling that on the Hill, and surrounding it, for civil government alone, nearly $5,000,000 is taken out of the taxpayer's pile that he has to lay before the Government each year for the expenditures of this country."

The Truth of It.

In the first place the amount is not $5,000,000, but $4,703,707.

In the second place before Mr. Foster could make his figures reach the total of $4,703,707 he added the Conservation commission, the civil service commission, High Commissioner's office, London, the salaries of the Ministers of the Crown, the Governor-General's office, and to cap it the salaries of the Lieutenant-Governors of the provinces, the judges of the land, and Dominion police.

How People are Misled.

Not content with this he added also the sums placed in the estimate for contingencies, printing, etc. Including the general contingency sum for all the departments of $54,000. He lumps these figures all together and says: "Look at the great extravagance on the Hill. It is unthinkable that all these men are required in the public service." It is startling, says Foster, that $5,000,000 a year are required on the Hill.

The impression Mr. Foster sought to create in the country was that in the Civil Service at Ottawa, "On the Hill," as he puts it, a sum of $5,000,000 a year was expended, and this was extravagance. It has been shown how Mr. Foster arrived at his figures.

Over $1,000,000 Wrong.

Now, then, deduct the salaries of the ministers, the premiers, and the amount in the estimates for contingencies, and there is a sum of $736,296 to be deducted, not from $5,000,000, but from $4,703,403, and this leaves the sum of $3,967,157. Deduct again the salaries of the judges, amounting to $103,498, and the result is $3,863,709, or $1,136,291 nearer the truth than the figures submitted by Mr. Foster.

An Absurd Comparison.

Mr. Foster presented the childish argument as to what it cost in 1898-4 to run the government and again in 1896, and he made his comparisons from these figures. He admitted that from 1883 to 1896 the Conservatives had increased the cost of the public service by thirty per cent., at a time when there was absolutely nothing to show for it, and deprecated the increase since 1896 without showing the difference in the growth between the two periods.

Mr. Fielding's Retort.

Mr. Fielding retorted that in 1896 the revenue was less than $34,000,000, and that the revenue since had grown to $95,000,000. Speaking to the point of expenditures, Mr. Felding said that Conservatives in the House were quite as ready as Liberals to ask for new post offices. He further said there never was a time when the Opposition were so well treated in the matter of public expenditure, but this increase measured the expansion of the country. He concluded by saying that when the people take into consideration not merely the increased expenditure, but the increased business and the increased prosperity of Canada, the conclusion would be reached that we have simply been keeping pace with the growth of the country.

Who Got the Rifles.

A curious incident occurred with reference to the Ross rifle. Col. Worthington, Conservative, an opponent of the rifle, asked the Minister of Militia how many individuals had received the latest pattern of Ross rifle. The reply was twelve. Col. Worthington thought he might unearth a graft so he asked a second question: "Who are the twelve individuals to whom rifles of this pattern have been issued?" The reply startled the Colonel and greatly interested the House when Sir Frederick read that among the twelve who secured rifles were the following:

Col. Sam Hughes, M.P., Conservative.
W. H. Sharpe, M.P., Conservative.
W. D. Staples, M.P., Conservative.
J. A. Sexsmith, M.P., Conservative.
W. Price, M.P., Conservative.
J. Arthurs, M.P., Conservative.
J. D. Taylor, M.P., Conservative.

They Formerly Denounced Rifle.

These men belong to the party which denounced the Ross rifle until the victories it won for itself at Bisley and elsewhere compelled the sense less fight to stop. Col. Hughes was always a champion of the rifle, and declared the fight against it was a conspiracy organised by rival manufacturers.

It may be mentioned that the Government paid for these rifles, but the men whose names appeared above receipted for them, but paid nothing. Col. Hughes explained that the rifles were issued for the purpose of placing them in the hands of expert marksmen. The Conservatives have never explained to the people that they were deceived as to the rifle, and that it is the best small arm in the world.

Loss of Steamer Hestia.

An attempt was made to attach blame to the Marine Department for the loss of the steamer "Hestia" recently, in the Bay of Fundy. An inquiry before a competent board of wreck commissioners, all of them experienced navigators and master mariners, resulted in the finding as below, in short.

What Commissioners Found.

1. Due to "Gassons" error, accentuated by iron cargo of 800 tons.
2. Neglecting to take sounding when in sight of Gannet rock light.
3. Not sufficient allowance for ebb tide and strong wind.
4. Error of judgment on part of ship's master in allowing ship to be off her course.

Department Not in Fault.

These were the main points established in the inquiry, and the Marine Department was in no way to blame. It was shown that the ship was nine miles off her course, that she steered badly, and that no soundings were taken for two hours before she struck. The fact that a gas buoy had been reported out, or adrift, had been publicly announced in the papers, and the agent of the line to which the boat belonged was aware of this. Mariners had been notified by the department that gas buoys are unwatched, and that they could not be depended upon as those shown in watched light-houses. The finding of the commissioners showed clearly that no blame was attached to the department.

Abortive Graft Charge.

The Interior Department was criticized for selling the St. Peter's Indian reserve at Selkirk. Conservatives tried to make it appear that the Indians had been bribed to agree to the surrender, and that the land had been disposed of to men having influence with the department, and that the whole transaction was crooked.

They Were in Hot Water.

The Minister of the Interior very soon caused the Conservative members from Manitoba to withdraw their imputations when he announced that the surrender was arranged by Chief Justice Howell, of Manitoba, and that the Department did no more than carry out the surrender as the Chief Jusice arranged it.

Tory Signed the Surrender.

It appears that after the surrender had been arranged by Chief Justice Howell, it was agreed to by vote of the tribe, and Dr. Grain, Conservative member in the local House for that locality, signed the document as a witness.

It also appears that the land was put up for public action to the highest bidder, after having been duly advertised in the local papers, and papers at a distance.

It is also a fact, that before the sale the land was examined by a competent land valuator on the part of the Government, and that the land brought more money on the average than he reported it to be worth.

It was not denied when the minister asserted that the patents issued to the Indians for the land they were to receive, and that these patents were personally handed to the Indians entitled to them.

Talk, Not Proof.

As against the statement that the Indian agent acted improperly or in collusion with certain people to acquire lands from the Indians, Mr. Oliver stated that if the Opposition could establish that this agent trafficked in these lands wrongfully, he would guarantee that the agent would cease to be an agent on very short notice; but so far he had no knowledge of the fact.

The conditions of the surrender were read and explained to the Indians in detail, and discussed by the band for two days before the surrender was signed.

Real Cause of Grievance.

One Conservative member gave what was probably the real reason for attacking the Government on this matter. Mr. Bradbury, of Selkirk, said: "A great many people around Selkirk wanted to purchase, including a lot of my own friends; but as soon as it was made known that the department would not recognize any pledges or transfers given by the Indians until after the patents were issued, not one of these men would buy an acre of land."

This explains much, it shows that friends of the Conservative member wanted to buy some of the land from the Indians, but when the found that the Government would not recognize any pledges or transfers made by the Indians, they kept out, consequently there was not much competition for the lands, and the realit was the selling price was lower than it would have been had these men bid. Thus another attempt to prove graft failed.

Prince Edward Tunnel.

The annual reference to the necessity for a tunnel connecting Prince Edward Island with the mainland was participated in by the members from that Province. The discussion took a different form on this occasion, and what was wanted was a survey. Hon. Mr. Fielding expressed himself sympathetically, and said that the matter should be taken up more vigorously and seriously in the endeavour to get a survey by reliable engineers. If it was found that the important work could be done at a moderate cost, it would receive his hearty and cordial support.

Georgian Bay and Welland Canals.

The Prime Minister and Minister of Railways and Canals received a big deputation urging the deepening of the Welland canal. Sir Wilfrid made himself quite clear on the subject that the work of improving our waterways must be done. He said the deepening of the Saskatchewan river would be commenced this year, and the Welland canal must be placed in a condition to assist in moving the traffic from the west.

They Will be Built.

After stating that the Government were just as anxious to deepen the Welland canal as the deputation was to have it done, the Premier alluded to the Georgian Bay canal. "There was no rivalry," he said, "between the St. Lawrence canal system and the Georgian Bay canal. Both would be needed. We had no idea of the future trade of this country. We would soon have to handle 250,000,000 bushels of grain, and the Georgian Bay canal must come." The Premier made it very clear that he was awake to the necessity of an advanced transportation policy. "A commencement must be made somewhere, and that that commencement must be made on the Welland canal. Montreal must be placed in a position where it could compete with New York with more than success."

Will Redeem Pledges.

The Laurier Government will keep every promise ever made to the people. The people have spoken with regard to the National Transcontinental and the Government is urging on its construction. The people say that the Welland canal must be deepened, and the Georgian Bay canal built. The Laurier Government has promised to carry on both these important public works at the earliest possible moment. In the face of this what need is there to pay any attention to the prejudiced criticism of a handful of men in the House, when millions of people on the outside have clearly expressed their desires? The Laurier Government is a government of the people, for the people, and great public works necessary to the business of the people will be constructed in due course.

GERMAN OFFICERS SEEK SUICIDE

Three in One Week End Their Lives Under the Strain of Iron Discipline.

Berlin, Dec. 1.—Though the army's iron discipline makes admirable soldiers its strain seems to render some of the army's officers unfit to combat disappointments, misfortunes, and dangers in these times of peace.

Within the week three officers have committed suicide or tried to for reasons rather sentimetnal.

Lieut. Buckholz, only nineteen years old, the youngest officer in the infantry regiment in garrison at Graudenz, added murder to his attempt at suicide. When he was at a cadet school recently, Buckholz engaged himself to marry a pretty girl named Piepke, a clerk in a shop. When he received his commission, the loyal Buckholz refused to break his engagement. His superior officers told him that was the only thing to do; that it is impossible for an officer in his Majesty's army to marry a clerk. The young woman's parents recognized this perfectly and urged their daughter and Lieut. Buckholz to forget their hopeless passion.

Fraulein Piepke was missed from her home last Sunday. Anxious parents learned that she was in Lieut. Buckholz's rooms in the garrison. The mother hastened to complain to the colonel of the lieutenant's regiment. The father sought his daughter. The door of the lieutenant's room was broken open and the horrified father saw the girl dead. Besides, a shot inflicted by himself had passed through the lieutenant's eye, so, even if he survives, wihch is doubtful, he will be incapacitated for military service, for his eye had to be removed instantly. His career as a soldier is ended. Letters found since prove that the pair deliberately planned suicide together.

The second of these military tragedies was the suicide of Chief Veterinary Surgeon Heuer, of the Field Artillery. He poisoned himself with morphia—"enough to kill a horse," said the chemist who made the analysis. The motive for the suicide was not explained until it developed that Chief Surgeon Heuer killed himself rather than appear in a duel in which he had been challenged by Chief Veterinary Surgeon Gube of Hohensalza.

This is another suicide caused by the system of duelling, nominally forbidden but actually compulsory in the German army. The army newspaper organ, the Taegliche Rundschau, insists that the "fear" of a duel could not have driven Heuer to suicide, for officers in the army know no fear. Nor could Heuer have a conscientious objection to duelling. So his suicide was a confession. He knew his side of the quarrel with Gube could not be supported, so he preferred to take his own life.

The third suicide of the week has been already described by The World correspondent. A lieutenant shot himself on his wedding day because he was tortured by the memory that in a duel a short time before he had killed a brother lieutenant on his wedding day.

A FRIEND TO WOMEN

What most women require to make them strong and healthy, and to restore good complexion and a well rounded form is more blood, more, rich, red blood, such as is added to the system by Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. Headache, indigestion and the weaknesses and irregularities which accompany exhausted nerves soon disappear when this great restorative treatment is used.

ROOSEVELT PARTY RETURNS TO COAST

All in Good Health and Delighted With Hunt—A Lion Killing Display.

Londiani, British East Africa, Dec. 1.—Col. Roosevelt, Kermit Roosevelt, Edmund Heller and Leslie A. Tarlton arived here to-day from Guas Inghisu Plateau. All are in splendid health. Col. Roosevelt expressed himself as delighted at again meeting R. J. Cunningham, and members of the American party who awited him here. The former President is greatly elated over the success of the hunt on the plateau.

Among the sights witnessed was a display of lion-killing with spears by Mandi warriors. The exhibition was thrilling.

The evening the party will proceed to Njoro, where they will be the guests of Lord Delamere on the latter's ranch until December 10, when they will proceed to Nairobi.

HUNGRY FOR HUG FROM HOWARD

Mrs. Christy is Willing to Make Up With Her Artist Husband.

New York, Dec. 2.—"If Howard wants to make up, all he has to do is to take me in his arms and I will forgive everything and forget all our troubles," said Mrs. Howard Chandler Christy, wife of the artist, at the home of her sister-in-law, Mrs. Hall, here yesterday, as she discussed the status of the Christy family differences. She expressed this willingness to forgive and to forget when informed that Mr. Christy had said in Zanesville, Ohio, where he is contesting the habeas corpus proceedings brought by his wife to recover possession of their ten-year-old daughter, Nathalie, that she must take the first step towards a reconciliation.

Mrs. Christy added that she was willing to do almost anything to effect the reconciliation, except to go to Zanesville to live.

Zanesville and some of her husband's relatives there, she said, had caused most of the troubles.

"I did not want any court proceedings," continued th artist's young wife vigorously, "and the only reason I brought them was to get Nathalie back. I want our little girl, but I want Howard more. We can all be happy together again here in the East.

"If Howard will only see things in this light, we can have a happy Christmas together."

COMING-OUT PARTY FOR COLLEGE GRAD

Parents Have Issued Invitations for Their Son's Debut.

Chicago, Dec. 1.—The "gentleman debutant" who has a coming out party in his honour has appeared in North Side society.

The knight with the new shining mail fresh from the society armoury, and supposedly with vulnerable spots for Cupid's darts, is Walter Gregory Rodiger, No. 84 Bellevue place, late of Yale.

Mr. Rodiger is to be the centre of attention at a function which is set forth in neatly engraved invitations sent out by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Rodiger, calling upon society to come to a dancing function in honour of their son.

Mrs. Rodiger was reticent. "Just a formal notice—a dance for our son," she murmured with the full measure of discretion which is to be expected of the mother of the deutant.

"I assume that it is his formal introduction to society?" quoth the inquirer.

A silvery twinkle of amusement travelled over the telephone wire from Mrs. Rodiger's end.

"Oh, we don't want that—just a formal notice," she replied deprecatingly.

"But that is what the dance is for, isn't it?"

"Why, we don't want—er—yes—really, all we care for is a paragraph, you know," rseponded the tactful Mrs. Rodiger.

Then, in response to questions, Mrs. Rodiger admitted that her son was graduated from Yale last June, but she did not care to say whether he was pre-eminent in football, baseball, rowing, or bridge.

HOCKEY IS TAME

Chicago Pioneer Will Not Accept It as a Substitute For Football.

Some one, writing to a New York newspaper, descants upon the joys of hockey, which he says, are far above those of football as a winter sport. With the appalling list of football fatalities in the season just closed, we may well look about us for some less dangerous form of entertainment for our youth, but there are grave doubts that the ice game will ever supersede that on the gridiron. For one thing it is an all winter game—if you have the ice—but this winter in many places the only ice to be had is sold by the pound. Then, too, an all winter game is a much more exhaustive drain on the system than one with a short, sharp season.

The hockey advocate says that one cannot be badly injured in the game. At the most, he says, the players get only a few "hacks" on the shins. That is the one objection. The finesse of the players cannot be seen by the spectators, who have now become educated to the shock of football battle, the mass of squirming, fighting contestants piled upon the unfortunate man with the ball, and to see the injured borne from the field. Hockey is a fine, invigorating sport where there is good hard winter, but it is too tame for a public whose instincts for battle have been so aroused as to demand actual conflict and danger.

"SWEET CHERRIES"

From Farm and Dairy.

Mr. F. G. Stewart, Homer, discussed the subject "Sweet Cherries for South-western Ontario," at the recent fruit growers' convention in Toronto. He said that the soil for this fruit must be light and dry. The trees must be well cared for particularly in the matter of spraying. Plenty of spraying material should be applied. Use one barrel to about seven trees to keep the rot under control. Among the varieties recommended were, Governor Wood, Alton, Napoleon Biggareau, Black Tartarian and Windsor. Mr. C. E. Bassett, Fennville, Mich., pointed out the absolute necessity for air drainage in the cherry orchard. He said that a free circulation of air will largely prevent fungous diseases.

In an address on "Cherries for the Commercial orchards of Ontario," Mr. A. E. Sherrington, Walkerton, said that sweet cherries are not a success in the northern parts of the province. Yellow Spanish is the most essential. To prevent rot in cherries the trees should be sprayed in the spring before any growth appears with three pounds of bluestone to 40 gallons of water, again with Bordeaux just before the bloom opens, repeat after the blossoms fall and again 10 days later. The soil should be warm, dry and sandy. The Morello class can be grown on well drained clay loams. On sandy soils the trees may be planted 20 feet apart and on clay loams 25 feet. In pruning direct the growth by pinching when young. Some varieties recommended by the speaker were: Early Richmond, if well cared for and fed; English Morello, profitable but the tree is short lived; Montmorency, best commercial variety; Olivet, satisfactory.

Do cherries pay? This question was answered by Mr. Sherrington with figures. At 25 feet apart there are 70 trees to the acre which should yield 8 to 10 baskets a tree at 8 to 10 years of age, or 560 baskets an acre. At a net price of 60 cents per 11-quart basket, this gives $336 to the acre. This shows that it is profitable to grow cherries of this class. Harvesting, the package and the market are the problems. Cherries can be shipped to the west successfully. They should be harvested when ripened and when dry as they will then stand up much better. Three or four pickings should be made from a tree. The fruit should not be handled but picked by the stem, clipped or pulled. Mr. Sherrington pays 12 cents a basket for picking. He said that the 11-quart basket is not the best package for cherries. We require a smaller package or a box which should be flat.

COUNTY COUNCIL TAKES UP THE QUESTION OF REFORESTRY

Listen to a Profitable Address by Mr. Jas. Lawler Last Night---A Matter of Supreme Importance to the County of Peterborough.

The County Council is showing its interest in a matter that is of the greatest importance to Peterborough County as it is in the other sections of Canada, namely, a study of the best methods of preserving Canada's timber resources. The forests of Peterborough county are rapidly disappearing and nothing is being done to protect the new growth with the result that the wealth of the county is being rapidly depleted.

Warden R. N. Scott and the members of the Council realized that fact and took advantage of the presence in the city of Mr. Jas. Lawler, secretary of the Canadian Forestry Association to secure an address from that gentleman who is an authority on the subject.

Warden Scott saw at once the value of reforestration and he succeeded in inducing Mr. Lawler to remain over and give his lecture before the members of the County Council. Mr. Lawler gave his lecture in the County Council chambers last night and aside from furnishing an abundance of information as to the value of the forest, not only for the timber, but to agricultural and manufacturing interests he let in the light where the representatives of this county saw the way to greatly increase the wealth of the county.

Mr. Lawler showed many views of waste lands caused by the destruction and neglect of the forests which can be seen in reality any day in many parts of Peterborough county. He also pointed out the way to prevent that waste. The councillors became interested and now they are aroused to the true condition of affairs it will not be long before some very active campaign is started.

In Northumberaind and Durham there are 15,000 acres of waste land. At the present time the county is carrying on a campaign for the purpose of arousing the people and of deciding whether the county will acquire the lands and set them aside for a forest reserve or induce the Ontario Covernment to undertake the work. The property they figure will cost $75,000, and it will reforest itself, and then in 30 or 40 years the county will begin to reap the benefit from the sale of timber, but in the meantime the value of the farm land in the county will have greatly increased throuhg the presence of the forest which holds the moisture in the soil and even holds the soil intact.

Other speakers were Lt.-Col. A. Stevenson, Crown Lands Agent; Councillor Hales of Chandos, Messrs. J. H. Bradburn, A. E. Peck and S. R Armstrong Mr. Hales stated that if Peterborough County was left alone and a few capable men put in the back country to look after the forest land and prevent fires and thefts, this county would very soon reforest itself, and that it was rapidly reforesting itself now. The fires, however, are very destructive and must be watched or the timber will soon be of no use.

A popular idea seemed to be that the country secure control of these forest lands and hold them as forest reserves so that the county will receive the profits from the timber instead of the government.

At the conclusion of the meeting Councillor Knox of Havelock, moved a vote of thanks to Mr. Lawler for his splendid address and to the other gentlemen who had spoken. This was seconded by Councillor Darling of Dummer, and was carried unanimously.

FURTHER DETAILS OF THE NEW ELECTRIC RAILWAY

One of the Branches Will Touch Western End of Rice Lake on its Way to Peterborough.

THE PLANS OF COMPANY

Toronto, Dec. 2.—Application has been made at Ottawa for the incorporation of a company that purposes building an electric railway from Port Hope to Toronto, passing through Newcastle, Bowmanville, Oshawa, and Whitby, with branches to Uxbridge, Lindsay, and Peterborough, and also sublines south to Lake Ontario. At present the G.T.R. runs considerably south of these towns, with the exception of Port Hope, while the C. N. R. survey is far to the north. The names on the application include Dr. T. E. Kaiser, W. F. Cowan and Robt. McLaughlin, of Oshawa; Frank Bobson and J. H. Downey, of Whitby, and Ralph R. Mowbray, of Kinsale.

Capital of $1,000,000.

The new company proposes to start with a capital of $1,000,000, the major part of which is Oshawa money. The promoters declare that this capital has been pledged and is on hand, waiting only for the sanction of Parliament to be placed upon their scheme. The head office of the projected line, which, it appears, will be electric throughout, is to be in Oshawa. The words of the bill call for a main or base line running near the shore of the lake, with four branch lines, as follows:

1. "From a point in the city of Toronto running easterly through or near the towns of Whitby, Oshawa and Bowmanville to Cobourg."

2. "From a point in or near Cobourg to Peterborough."

3. "From a point in Scarboro' township to the towns of Markham, Stouffville or Uxbridge."

4. "From a point in or near Oshawa northerly by the east side of Lake Scugog to Lindsay."

5. "From a point in or near Oshawa southerly to a point on Lake Ontario.

The two last branches, the former a long and the latter a short one, giving water communication, and hence connection, with lake traffic, will join the same line at the main point, probably in or very near the town of Oshawa itself.

It is understood that the promoters have their plans laid, and, immediately upon receiving favourable reports from Ottawa, will send out a small army of surveyors and engineers to locate the line, intending to push it to completion as rapidly as possible.

Routes of the Branches.

The branch starting from near Scarboro' Junction will tap the towns of Markham, Stouffville, Goodwood, Bloomington and Uxbridge, and will thus be over 25 miles in length.

The branch from Oshawa to the north will run to Caesarea and then skirting the shores of Lake Scugog will turn to the north at the upper end and take in several places on its way to Lindsay. While the lake will take off some some of the contributory territory on that side, the promoters count this is an excellent proposition. The branch leaving Cobourg will probablyru n through Ross Mount and almost touching the west end of Rice Lake, will take straight north to Peterborough.

The shortest of the branches, that from Oshawa to the shore of Lake Ontario, is a hopeful tentacle stretched out to catch lake trade.

While the course of the line from Scarboro' into Toronto has not been announced, it is thought it will take much the direction of the new Canadian Northern line.

Dr. T. E. Kaiser was in Toronto a day or so ago to confer as to the possibility, and the difficulties of effecting an entrance into the city. The promoters seem to have no doubt that they will will be able to come to an agreement regarding the manner of their entrance.

SHEEP INDUSTRY IN ONTARIO

From Farm and Dairy.

In support of their claim that the sheep industry in Ontario has not received due recognition from the Ontario Government, some leading sheep breeders have evinced a tendency to claim that the dairy interests have received more than their share of government support. It is a poor line of effort that endeavors to profit by pulling others back.

During the past year, action has been taken by the Ontario Department of Agriculture, assisted by the Sheep Breeders' Association, to attempt to revive the sheep industry. The method chosen is the establishment of illustration stations in eight counties of this province. This work is commendable, the object of it being to show that there is good profit in sheep raising to the ordinary farmer and with ordinary grades of sheep.

If more of this kind of assistance is needed or other work required to build up the sheep industry, it is up to the sheep men themselves to see that they get it. The dairy interests have received what assistance has come their way through organizing and going directly after it. They have shown the need for the desired assistance, and that the money granted would be well expended. Sheep breeders can have their wants supplied in the same manner, i.e., by stating their case, and making known their wants. The sheep industry is such an important one to this province that the government will not be apt to hesitate long to extend to it any further additional assistance, once the need for it is demonstrated.

PILES Dr. Chase's Ointment is a certain and guaranteed cure for each and every form of Itching, Bleeding and protruding piles. See testimonials in the press and ask your neighbors about it. You can use it and get your money back if not satisfied. 60c, at all dealers or EDMANSON, BATES & CO., Toronto.

PARKDALE'S CHANCES

Star Says the O.R.F.U. Champions Are Not to be Overlooked in Saturday's Game—Have Good Wing Line.

BACKS ARE AVERAGE

Ottawa spilled the beans!

So did Varsity.

Will Parkdale disturb the equilibrium of the receptacle containing the vegeteble sustenance for which the capital of Massachusetts is justly famous?

As the days go by, and the exhilaration of victory has evaporated, people are commencing to inquire about this team from Parkdale, and cogitate upon its chances against the conquerors of the Inter-Provincial champions.

Parkdale Paddlers are not to be regarded with disdain. They were brilliant as juniors, winning the 1908 Inter-Provincial junior championship in jig style and they cleaned up Peterborough and T.A.A.C. by big scores until the day T.A.A.C. woke up and handed them an unexpected 10-6 defeat They beat T.A.A.C. in the play-off however and T.A.A.C. had a good team on. In the T.A.A.C. game the Paddler's wings sifted through the T.A.A.C. like water through a sieve and T.A.A.C. had "some" line A line with George Mara, Yellow Bill Forbes, Leslie Crooks, Robertson, Maguire, Holden, Burkart, and McGiffen, isn't any joke line.

Look that Parkdale cub team over. Collectively they are as heavy as Varsity, and they are as speedy all along the line. They have some team play, too.

Take the Parkdale wing line and look it over. The scrimmage is: Addison, Leonard, and Duncan, who have been playing together since Parkdale had a team. They are all good husky boys. At inside they have Rosa and Frank Dissette. They, too are husky and aggressive. At middle wings Parkdale have two of the Tammany Tiger stars, Meighen and Joe Harper. Both are extra fast and they will mix it with anybody and go after the ball anywhere.

At outside Parkdale has two particularly good men in George Barber, the Central Y.M.C.A. athlete, and Jack Brockbank, the ex-Toronto player. Barber played with the old Victorias and with Argonauts in the Big Four last year. He can run a hundred in 10 2-5 seconds, and is almost as big a man as Bert Stronach. He is a good tackler, too. Brockbank is a very speedy boy, though he has no sprinting mark. He is a fierce tackler and is always on his man. He will be going from whistle to whistle.

Behind the line the Paddlers have Jimmie Dissette, a cracking good quarter, and a heavier man than Foulds. On the half line are Moore, Killaly and Cromar, and behind them Brady, the ex-Dundasite. Brady, the full back is a good one. He is husky and can catch, run and kick. Killaly, the ex-captain, played a nice game in the saw-off against T.A.A.C. in spite of the fact that he had no practice. He is a heady boy and reliable. Cromar one the left is a hard man to stop once he gets going. He is a tricky runner but he is none too sure on the catch. Moore at right is a good youngster, but, of course, taking it as a whole, Parkdales' back division is not as good as Varsity's. Take Lawson off and there wouldn't be a great deal to choose between them on the form shown this year. However, there is only one Smirlie Lawson and one Coach Griffith.

THE LINE-UPS FOR TO-NIGHT'S ROLLER RINK HOCKEY GAME

There is every reason to expect a lively game of hockey to-night when the Lindsay Roller Rink team will clash with the Brock St. Rink team on the local arena. The Lindsay team is strengthened for the game and expects to beat the Petes as handily as they did a week ago in Lindsay when the Scugog team had the large end of a 4 to 1 score. However the local aggregation is in good shape and expect to win handily, figuring that the larger skating surface will have the visitors all at sea before the game is over. The teams will line up as follows:

Peterborough—Goal, Chute; point, Godfrey; cover, White; forwards, Smith, Thompson, Kenneally, Halpany.

THE PARKDALE TEAM HAS GREAT WEIGHT ON THE LINE

Toronto, Dec. 1st.—"The Parkdale O.R.F.U. champions, are going to score quite a few against the Intercollegiate champions on Saturday," said a well known dopester this morning, referring to the coming battle for the Canadian Rugby championship, which will be played next Saturday at Rosedale. This is the opinion of many followers of this game. Not only that, they look for the score in this game to be much closer than the Ottawa-Varsity result, as they think the two teams will play such aggressive games that frequent tallies will be made.

The publication of the weights and age of the Paddlers has caused no little comment, as it was then seen that the intercollegiate team have no advantage to speak of, in weight, while though the Parkdalers are older than the students, they are not too old. The table of the Parkdale players is as follows:—

Weights and Ages.

	Weight.	Age.
Fullback Brady	165	26
Centre Half Killaly	150	24
Left Half Cromar	155	22
Right Half Moore	155	19
Quarter (Capt.) Dissette	160	21
C. Scrimmage Leonard ..	185	20
R. Scrimmage Addison..	190	30
Left Scrimmage Duncan	170	23
L. Wing Rose	160	24
R. Inside F. Dissette.. ..	185	25
R. Middle Meaghen	190	26
L. Middle Harper	170	26
R. Outside Barber	190	25
L. Outside Brockbank ..	175	25

Total weight, 2,300; average weight, 170.4; average age, 24.

FOOTBALL

Ottawa made money this fall. The surplus will probably be about $4,000. The total receipts came to about $8,000.

The meeting of R. M. C. and Dundas for the intermediate honours will likely prove to be a warm game.

Hugh Gall will likely captain the Varsity team next season, as this is Jack Newton's last year at the college

The Yale team has been out of training for two weeks, so it is very improbable that the American college champions will take on any Canadian team, much to the disappointment of the local players.

Anyway if a team wants to play a game with Yale, the Blues have to be approached one year beforehand.

The Royal Military College team hasn't lost a game this season. They will line up against Dundas on Saturday as follows: Meredith, full back; Smith, Greene, Stuart, halves; Campbell, quarter; Young, Holt, Blue, scrimmage; Arnold, Rogers, inside wings; Goldie, Parr, middle wings; Gwynne, Baswell (captain), outside wings.

WARSHIPS GO SOUTH

William Kimball Is Sent In Command of Fleet to Handle Any Delicate Situation That May Arise — Zelaya Has a Scheme Whereby He Can Keep Hold on the Rulership of the Disturbed Country.

Washington, Dec. 3.—Naval forces of the United States are being moved forward to-day to both coasts of Central America for the purpose of protecting American life and property in Nicaragua. With the despatch yesterday from Philadelphia of the troopship Prairie with 700 marines for the Isthmus of Panama, and, if it be so decreed, for Nicaragua, and with the sailing from Magdalena Bay of the cruiser Albany and the gunboat Yorkton for Corinto, on the Pacific coast of Nicaragua, the activity of the Navy Department is becoming manifest on both oceans that wash the Nicaraguan shores.

Besides, the cruisers DesMoines and Tacoma and the gunboat Marietta are lying off Port Limon, Costa Rica, ready for any call upon them, and the guns of the little gunboat Vicksburg are pointed toward the custom house and town of Corinto. The gunboat Princeton is endeavoring to make her way from the Bremerton navy yard, Washington, to Corinto also.

With the probability of many delicate questions arising in Nicaragua and of their demanding immediate response, the Navy Department decided to send a flag officer to Nicaragua to take command of the American naval forces. Rear Admiral Wm. Kimball was chosen for that duty, and sailed yesterday for Colon on the Prairie. Doubtless he will proceed to Corinto as rapidly as possible.

Two of the vessels ordered south have already met with slight mishape. The gunboat Princeton, while off Willapa harbor on the Pacific coast Monday night, ran on the North Spit and sustained a few minor injuries.

Yesterday the troopship Princeton ran aground in the Delaware River between Newcastle and Delaware city.

There is a report in circulation today to the effect that President Zelaya has developed a plan whereby he can resign and, at the same time retain the reins of power. This plan consists of putting into the office of President of Nicaragua Jose Madriz, well known in Central American diplomatic circles as Zelaya's henchman, and declared to be at Zelaya's beck and call. The State Department, it is declared, is entirely cognizant of the conspiracy under way, and will act vigorously and promptly if occasion demands.

Defends Pauper Woman.

New York, Dec. 3.—Mrs. Crisante, a woman charged with having shot her husband after he had constantly abused her, was yesterday acquitted of a murder charge.

Too poor to engage counsel, the court had called on Max Untermeyer, one of the city's most prominent lawyers, who with a few other lawyers had agreed to defend any prisoner who might require counsel engaged at the state's expense. His masterly efforts won her discharge and he at once presented her with a comparatively small fee, which the state will pay him.

Man and Woman Killed.

Montreal, Dec. 3.—The badly mangled remains of a man and woman were found along the G.T.R. tracks, corner St. Elizabeth street and Cote St. Paul road last night. It is supposed they were run down by an engine.

LIBERALS ARE IN A UNIT

Resolution Is Passed by Commons Calling Rejection of the Budget a Breach of the Constitution and a Usurpation of the Rights of the People — King Will Dissolve the House Immediately.

London, Dec. 3.—At the opening of the House of Commons yesterday Premier Asquith announced that the Government had advised King Edward to dissolve Parliament and that His Majesty had accepted the invitation. The Premier added that if the Liberals were returned to power, the first act of the Government would be the re-enactment of all the taxes for which provision was made in the budget rejected by the House of Lords.

Later, by a majority of 215, during a brief but exciting sitting, the House recorded its claim to exclusive control of the nation's purse — a claim that never in modern times had been challenged until the House of Lords threw down the gauntlet by rejecting the budget.

The vote of yesterday was taken on a resolution offered by Premier Asquith, which declared "that the action of the House of Lords in refusing to pass into law the financial provisions made by this chamber for the expenses of the year, was a breach of the constitution and a usurpation of the rights of the House of Commons," and the resolution was passed by a vote of 349 to 134.

By this vote the opposing forces of the Lords and Commons are placed in battle array for one of the greatest constitutional struggles that has come before the country's judgment for centuries. The scenes of enthusiasm which accompanied the voting on Mr. Asquith's resolution were in marked contrast to those witnessed during the recent debates in the House of Lords. No prominent members from the Government side arose to utter solemn warnings against the course the Ministers were pursuing. The Ministerial ranks were closed in a complete unanimity of protest against the action of the Upper House.

Mr. Balfour, leader of the Opposition, evidently was suffering from the effects of his indisposition and did not speak at his best. His speech lacked the ring of sincerity and conviction which characterised the Prime Minister. The latter had an easy task in pouring ridicule upon what he described, amid the rousing and encouraging cheers of his supporters, a "new-fangled Caesarism—the arrogant usurpation" of the House of Lords.

The Premier's ironical reference to the instinct of divination of the peers on reaching manhood, dissolved his hearers to laughter. He quoted with trenchant effect the speech of Mr. Balfour less than a year ago, in which the ex-Premier described himself as "House of Commons man," and said: "It is the House of Commons, not the House of Lords, which settles and controlled our financial system. If the House could touch the money bills the whole executive machinery of the country would be brought to a standstill."

The session of Parliament was closing the Premier said, without a financial act and until fresh provision could be made, the necessities of state could be supplied only through borrowing.

He expressed the hope that the ultimate loss to the Government would not be very great, but said that so far as the present financial year was concerned, it was obvious that the result of the action of the House of Lords must be the largest deficit yet faced. His warnings, he said, had been unheeded and the responsibility of the chaos, confusion and loss must rest with the Lords.

Son and Daughter Dead.

Cobourg, Dec. 3.—To lose a son and a daughter by death almost at the same time is the bereavement that has fallen Mrs. George Broun and her family. The son, Wm. A. Broun, was bookkeeper for the wholesale firm of Nicholas Sharff & Sons, St. Louis. He came home a few weeks ago in poor health and died of heart trouble. The daughter, Mrs. J. Byers, died suddenly at Oxbow, Sask., where she has resided for some years. She leaves a husband and two daughters.

Small Boy Drowns.

Haliburton, Dec. 3.—Rolly, the ten-year-old son of Wm. Boyce, a farmer, at Maple Lake, 12 miles north of here, was drowned yesterday morning while playing on the ice on the lake. With some younger companions, he was testing a weak spot in the ice when he broke through.

Two Buried Alive.

Detroit, Mich., Dec. 3.—Julius C. Sander, a contractor, and John Luaki, a digger, were buried alive yesterday by the caving in of a sewer trench in which they were working. Their bodies were found at a depth of 17 feet after half an hour's digging.

Big Oil Land Withdrawal.

Washington, Dec. 3.—The announcement is made by the Geological Survey that President Taft has ordered more than 3,000,000 acres of public petroleum land in California, Wyoming, Utah and Oregon withdrawn from entry and sale.

WARSHIPS GO SOUTH

William Kimball Is Sent In Command of Fleet to Handle Any Delicate Situation That May Arise — Zelaya Has a Scheme Whereby He Can Keep Hold on the Rulership of the Disturbed Country.

Washington, Dec. 3.—Naval forces of the United States are being moved forward to-day to both coasts of Central America for the purpose of protecting American life and property in Nicaragua. With the despatch yesterday from Philadelphia of the troopship Prairie with 700 marines for the Isthmus of Panama, and, if it be so decreed, for Nicaragua, and with the sailing from Magdalena Bay of the cruiser Albany and the gunboat Yorkton for Corinto, on the Pacific coast of Nicaragua, the activity of the Navy Department is becoming manifest on both oceans that wash the Nicaraguan shores.

Besides, the cruisers DesMoines and Tacoma and the gunboat Marietta are lying off Port Limon, Costa Rica, ready for any call upon them, and the guns of the little gunboat Vicksburg are pointed toward the custom house and town of Corinto. The gunboat Princeton is endeavoring to make her way from the Bremerton navy yard, Washington, to Corinto also.

With the probability of many delicate questions arising in Nicaragua and of their demanding immediate response, the Navy Department decided to send a flag officer to Nicaragua to take command of the American naval forces. Rear Admiral Wm. Kimball was chosen for that duty, and sailed yesterday for Colon on the Prairie. Doubtless he will proceed to Corinto as rapidly as possible.

Two of the vessels ordered south have already met with slight mishaps. The gunboat Princeton, while off Willapa harbor on the Pacific coast Monday night, ran on the North Spit and sustained a few minor injuries.

Yesterday the troopship Princeton ran aground in the Delaware River between Newcastle and Delaware city.

There is a report in circulation today to the effect that President Zelaya has developed a plan whereby he can resign and, at the same time retain the reins of power. This plan consists of putting into the office of President of Nicaragua Jose Madriz, well known in Central American diplomatic circles as Zelaya's henchman, and declared to be at Zelaya's beck and call. The State Department, it is declared, is entirely cognisant of the conspiracy under way, and will act vigorously and promptly if occasion demands.

Defends Pauper Woman.

New York, Dec. 3.—Mrs. Crisante, a woman charged with having shot her husband after he had constantly abused her, was yesterday acquitted of a murder charge.

Too poor to engage counsel, the court had called on Max Untermeyer, one of the city's most prominent lawyers, who with a few other lawyers had agreed to defend any prisoner who might require counsel engaged at the state's expense. His masterly efforts won her discharge and he at once presented her with a comparatively small fee, which the state will pay him.

Man and Woman Killed.

Montreal, Dec. 3.—The badly mangled remains of a man and woman were found along the G.T.R. tracks, corner St. Elizabeth street and Cote St. Paul road last night. It is supposed they were run down by an engine.

LIBERALS ARE A UNIT

Resolution Is Passed by Commons Calling Rejection of the Budget a Breach of the Constitution and a Usurpation of the Rights of the People — King Will Dissolve the House Immediately.

London, Dec. 3.—At the opening of the House of Commons yesterday Premier Asquith announced that the Government had advised King Edward to dissolve Parliament and that His Majesty had accepted the invitation. The Premier added that if the Liberals were returned to power, the first act of the Government would be the re-enactment of all the taxes for which provision was made in the budget rejected by the House of Lords.

Later, by a majority of 315, during a brief but exciting sitting, the House recorded its claim to exclusive control of the nation's purse — a claim that never in modern times had been challenged until the House of Lords threw down the gauntlet by rejecting the budget.

The vote of yesterday was taken on a resolution offered by Premier Asquith, which declared "that the action of the House of Lords in refusing to pass into law the financial provisions made by this chamber for the expenses of the year, was a breach of the constitution and a usurpation of the rights of the House of Commons," and the resolution was passed by a vote of 349 to 134.

By this vote the opposing forces of the Lords and Commons are placed in battle array for one of the greatest constitutional struggles that has come before the country's judgment for centuries. The scenes of enthusiasm which accompanied the voting on Mr. Asquith's resolution were in marked contrast to those witnessed during the recent debates in the House of Lords. No prominent members from the Government side arose to utter solemn warnings against the course the Ministers were pursuing. The Ministerial ranks were closed in a complete unanimity of protest against the action of the Upper House.

Mr. Balfour, leader of the Opposition, evidently was suffering from the effects of his indisposition and did not speak at his best. His speech lacked the ring of sincerity and conviction which characterized the Prime Minister. The latter had an easy task in pouring ridicule upon what he described, amid the rousing and encouraging cheers of his supporters, a "new-fangled Caesarism—the arrogant usurpation" of the House of Lords.

The Premier's ironical reference to the instinct of divination of the peers on reaching manhood, dissolved his hearers to laughter. He quoted with trenchant effect the speech of Mr. Balfour less than a year ago, in which the ex-Premier described himself as "House of Commons man," and said: "It is the House of Commons, not the House of Lords, which settles and controlled our financial system. If the House could touch the money bills the whole executive machinery of the country would be brought to a standstill."

The session of Parliament was closing the Premier said, without a financial act and until fresh provision could be made, the necessities of state could be supplied only through borrowing.

He expressed the hope that the ultimate loss to the Government would not be very great, but said that so far as the present financial year was concerned, it was obvious that the result of the action of the House of Lords must be the largest deficit yet faced. His warnings, he said, had been unheeded and the responsibility of the chaos, confusion and loss must rest with the Lords.

Son and Daughter Dead.

Cobourg, Dec. 3.—To lose a son and a daughter by death almost at the same time is the bereavement that has fallen Mrs. George Broun and her family. The son, Wm. A. Broun, was bookkeeper for the wholesale firm of Nicholas Sharff & Sons, St. Louis. He came home a few weeks ago in poor health and died of heart trouble. The daughter, Mrs. J. Byers, died suddenly at Oxbow, Sask., where she has resided for some years. She leaves a husband and two daughters.

Small Boy Drowns.

Haliburton, Dec. 3.—Rolly, the ten-year-old son of Wm. Boyce, a farmer, at Maple Lake, 12 miles north of here, was drowned yesterday morning while playing on the ice on the lake. With some younger companions, he was testing a weak spot in the ice when he broke through.

Two Buried Alive.

Detroit, Mich., Dec. 3.—Julius C. Sander, a contractor, and John Luski, a digger, were buried alive yesterday by the caving in of a sewer trench in which they were working. Their bodies were found at a depth of 17 feet after half an hour's digging.

Big Oil Land Withdrawal.

Washington, Dec. 3.—The announcement is made by the Geological Survey that President Taft has ordered more than 3,000,000 acres of public petroleum land in California, Wyoming, Utah and Oregon withdrawn from entry and sale.

A QUESTION OF BAIT.

Should the Beggar Leave Few or Many Cents in His Hat?

"One thing that I've never been able to settle in my mind to my own satisfaction," said a street beggar whose specialty is sitting on a step and holding out his hat to passersby, "is the question of how many pennies it is wise to have in the hat for people to see as they go by. Of course you understand there are two theories on this. Working on one you leave there only a few, just three or four pennies scattered around irregular, but pretty far apart, and on the other you leave in the hat a lot of pennies.

"Of course the idea of the first plan is to make people when they see how little you've got want to chip in and help, and the idea of the other plan is to stir people up to generosity by showing them how generous others have been, and there's a heap to be said for that. There's lots of people that give because other people have given—because they like to go with the crowd.

"I've tried both plans and had good days with lean bait and bad days with a full bait in the hat, and then I've had good days with a full bait and bad days with a lean bait. All you can do is, if one plan doesn't work well, try the other. You never can tell."

YOU WILL NOT BE DECEIVED

That there are cheats and frauds in plenty everybody knows; but it is seldom that any large business house is guilty of them, no matter what line of trade it follows. There can be no permanent success of any kind based on dishonesty or deception. There never was and never will be. The men who try that are simply fools and soon come to grief—as they deserve. Now, many persons are nevertheless, afraid to buy certain advertised articles lest they be humbugged and deluded; especially are they slow to place confidence in published statements of the merits of medicines. The effective remedy known as is as safe and genuine an article to purchase as flour, silk or cotton goods from the mills of manufacturers with a world-wide reputation. We could not afford to exaggerate its qualities or misrepresent it in the least; and it is not necessary. It is palatable as honey and contains all the curative properties of pure Cod Liver Oil, extracted by us from fresh cod livers, combined with the Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites and the Extracts of Malt and Wild Cherry; and how valuable such a blending of these important medicinal agents must be is plain to everybody. It is beyond price in Anaemia, Scrofula, Weakness and lack of Nervous Tone, all Lung Troubles and Impurities of the Blood. Science can furnish nothing better—perhaps nothing so good. Dr. McK. of Canada says: "I have used it in my practice and take pleasure in recommending it as a valuable tonic and reconstructive." It is a remedy that can afford to appeal to its record and represents the science and knowledge of bright and aggressive medical investigation. Like all good things it is imitated. "You cannot be disappointed in it." Sold by chemists throughout the world. Warne Drug Co.

AVIATION.

The Dangers Involved in Three Dimensional Steering.

The navigation of the air is a form of locomotion that differs from all the others to which men have resorted in that it involves three dimensional steering.

It is in the three dimensional nature of aviation that the real wonder of it lies. Its demands upon the aviator's attention are almost appalling in number and constancy. The automobilist has to mind what he is about not a little, and a moment's carelessness means disaster, but his divagations from safety are all horizontal. The road and gravity take care of the others for him, while the aeroplanist can make mistakes all the way around a sphere; hence, in addition to lending an attentive ear to every sound from a complicated and delicate engine, he must manipulate one rudder for up and down, another for right and left and two more at the ends of his wings. And all these must be combined and co-ordinated. Water is stability itself in comparison with the medium through which he moves. When in flight, therefore, the aviator is probably the busiest man alive, and there is not an instant of rest for him till after he has made his perilous descent.

He Put the Brake On.

In his autobiography the late Professor Shaler of Harvard tells this story: Once he was present at a dinner in England where Tyndall, the renowned scientist, started to tell about experiences in America. His descriptions were, to say the least, exaggerated. Just as he was telling about a thrilling escape from drowning which he had had while viewing Niagara falls—describing it with bursts of hyperbole—his eye happened to catch that of Shaler, whom he had not noticed before.

For a moment Tyndall stopped, abashed—then, with wink of the eye, as if begging Shaler not to "give him away," he continued the tale, but in a noticeably subdued vein.

At its conclusion Tyndall sought Shaler.

"I fear that yarn of mine was rather highly colored," he confessed to the American, "but it is sometimes necessary to touch up the truth a bit."

AN UNCANNY BREEZE.

It Blows From a Scar in the Forehead of a Famous Medium.

"No one who has seen the effects of a seance upon the Italian medium Eusapia Palladino could doubt its genuine character, as far as the medium is concerned," says a writer in McClure's. "At the conclusion of a seance she is faint, dizzy, nauseated, extremely weak and remembers little that has occurred during the seance, while her face becomes deeply lined, greenish yellow in color and appears to be shrunk almost to half its natural size.

"Another remarkable phenomenon frequently seen is this: There is a scar on Eusapia's forehead on the left side about an inch long, from which issues during and after a seance a mysterious cold breeze, clearly perceptible to the hands. When tested by a thermometer it has caused a fall of 5 or 4 degrees.

"Immediately over this scar there is one white lock of hair. The rest of her hair is grayish brown in color. After one seance I examined this famous scar, touching it with my fingers, and distinctly felt the cold breeze, which was perceptible to all of us.

"We covered the medium's mouth and nose with our hands to prevent her from blowing and held our own breath. The breeze was still perceptible.

"Finally, in order to test the hypothesis of hallucination, we held to her forehead a small tissue paper flag about two or three inches square, having covered her mouth and nose as before and being careful not to breathe upon it ourselves. The result was that the flag was blown out from her head several times strongly and finally so forcibly that it wrapped itself completely around the flagstaff supporting it. Thus the objective nature of this cold breeze was satisfactorily demonstrated."

Clothes of English Workmen.

I saw great numbers of workingmen among the mills and elsewhere in England, but outside of railroad quarters in London I did not see a single man wearing overalls. England is a cold country, and they want warm clothes. I did see quantities of good woolen breeches made from three-quarter cloth weighing from ten to twelve ounces selling at retail from 2s. 6d. to 3s. 6d. a garment, less than the price at which an eight ounce cotton cloth in overalls would cost a workingman in America, and I was told that woolen clothes were worn universally by the workingmen in England. In traveling through the country the great flocks of sheep indicated the source of this very cheap supply, and, while the cost of cotton garments for both men and women appears to be about the same as in America, the cost of the woolen garments appeared to be about one-half.—Textile Manufacturers' Journal.

Burglar Proof Plate Glass.

Consul William Bardell has reported from Rheims that a French inventor has come out with a new burglar proof plate glass, absolutely transparent at a thickness of one inch and yet which will resist a machinist's hammer long enough for a sleepy copper a block away to run up and interfere. Jacketed revolver bullets may be fired against the plate without breaking through. In one test a heavy piece of cast iron was buried against the glass, breaking through to the extent of only two or three square inches. Ordinary plate glass used in America may have three or four square feet smashed through with a common brick carried in a hand bag or wrapped up as a paper parcel. Practically the seven-eighths inch to one inch glass is burglar proof until such time as the enterprising felon discovers some effective substitute for the brick.

ARCTIC REGIONS FASCINATE.

Nome Has Woman's Club—Dawson's Afternoon Teas.

It is strange the fascination that the northland exerts on men and women, says Frances R. Sterret in the Housekeeper for October in an article which is of particular interest in view of the discovery of the north pole. The early boats are crowded with those who have been out for the winter and are hurrying back, called by that imperative voice of the arctic. A smartly dressed woman whose eyes held a new light every time Dawson was mentioned was the wife of a man who had made his hundreds of thousands in the Klondike. They had spent the winter at the Waldorf-Astoria, a fashionable New York hotel, and yet she was glad to get home. And what was home? Only a cabin again, a one room cabin on the side of the mountain a dozen miles from Dawson. Why did she want to get back, away from friends, theaters, music, lectures, when they had ample money to live luxuriously outside? She only smiled at the question and shook her head as though she could not explain to one who did not know. "I've got to get back, that's all!" she said simply.

"I've given up a house with four bathrooms to come to a country that hasn't a house with a tub in it," laughed another arctic housekeeper. "If you want to take a proper bath in even Nome or Dawson you will have to go to the bath house to do it. Winters are too long and too cold to bother with plumbing in the cabins."

The towns are all camps, the houses all cabins, in the north, but in these days of telephones and electric lights there are few hardships even on the creeks. Dawson is a Canadian camp, with its cheery afternoon tea, its tennis and cricket, while Nome is distinctly American, with a woman's club, the Kogoayah Kouga, which has its own clubhouse. As for dinners and luncheons, you would never believe what elaborate meals the women can serve in their small kitchens, and all from cans.

The cabins are tiny affairs, one, two, seldom more than three rooms, but from these bandboxes the women appear in smart afternoon gowns or filmy evening frocks. A fur parki drawn over the white satin and the felt shoes give a strangely incongruous touch, but one quite in keeping with the dog sled waiting to convey my lady to her party.

HEALTH AND BEAUTY.

If your face shows many blackheads as the result of accumulated dust, try using a paste made of ordinary sour buttermilk and flour. Work it into a thick paste that will be soft enough to rub over the face and neck like a cold cream. Massage it with the fingers until the flour begins to dry, and it will peel off in little rolls of black dough. You must then wash the face and will be happily surprised to see the skin clear and fresh looking. Clean the hands in the same manner.

Many women find that a little diluted peroxide of hydrogen brushed over the skin immediately when freckles appear possesses a magic power of dispelling them. One should, however, vary this treatment by applying some fatty cream, for the drug tends to wither and sometimes irritates the skin. An old fashioned remedy which is efficacious in fading out freckles is composed of the following ingredients: Lemon juice, one ounce; powdered borax, half dram. Blend these well together, put the mixture in a glass bottle and after allowing it to stand a few days apply to the spots occasionally with a small camel's hair brush.

There are numerous nerve diseases, but the worst form is that which is the direct result of imaginary hereditary conditions, says a writer. The young woman whose every nerve is tense insists that it is absolutely impossible for her to control herself because she inherits a nervous affliction. If the mind insists on receiving this impression the chances are the hapless victim will be nervous and remain so. A mother may have a nervous temperament, wherein it is possible the father will be the possessor of strong, hearty, robust health. Why can't the children imagine they possess the sturdy strength of the father and not the affliction of the mother? These nervous creatures drive constantly ahead. They could not, or, rather, would not, take a few minutes' rest if they knew some work had to be done. You cannot talk to these unhappy, unreasonable women, because they will not listen, and you cannot help them in any manner. Many after a time realize the foolishness of living with tightly stretched nerves, and they overcome the fault through their own will power. After they find repose in quieted nerves they are undoubtedly the happiest creatures imaginable and, what is more, true advocates of self help against imaginary hereditary "nerves."

Using Hair Tonics.

The woman who is ordered to use a tonic on her scalp must know how to apply it or her hair will be in worse condition than if none were used.

The ideal method is to have the tonic rubbed in by a hairdresser, but as that is out of the question to most women the next best thing is to own either a small oil can, such as can be bought for 10 cents, or a medicine dropper.

Put the tonic in either of these receptacles, which are equally good to distribute the liquid evenly on the scalp without wetting the hair. Divide the hair into strands and go over each part carefully before making a new division.

While the tonic is being applied with one hand rub it in well with the finger tips of the other hand.

New British Island.

Off the northwest coast of Australia there is an island which till recently belonged to no one. It is not a very large island—in fact, it measures only 385 yards by 30 yards. It has, however, a good anchorage, and for that reason its possession may at some time be valuable. The British government has therefore annexed the island, and an official notification of the fact recently reached the commonwealth minister for external affairs. The new British possession is known as Cartier Island and is almost surrounded by coral reefs.—Westminster Gazette.

Stair Climbing Horse.

In a famous Berlin street the other day a huge crowd collected in order to witness the unusual spectacle of a horse in a window on the fourth story of a house bowing and smiling at the people below. It was the result of a wager between an English sportsman and the owner of a musical horse. The animal climbed the stairs two at a time, reached the top in less than two minutes, but took three to descend. Some dozen photographers immortalized the horse's laughs.

The Sultan's Waistcoats.

Abdul Hamid's 2,000 waistcoats and the hundreds of boxes of shirts and vests found in Yildiz kiosk recall the posthumous sale of King George IV's wardrobe, which realized £15,000.—London Chronicle.

STOMACH DISTRESS AND DYSPEPSIA GO

Makes Your Out-of-Order Stomach Feel Fine in Five Minutes.

As there is often some one in your family who suffers from an attack of Indigestion or some form of Stomach trouble, why don't you keep some Diapepsin in the house handy?

This harmless blessing will digest anything you can eat without the slightest discomfort and overcome a sour, gassy stomach, five minutes after.

Tell your pharmacist to let you read the formula plainly printed on these 50-cent cases of Pape's Diapepsin, then you will readily see why it makes Indigestion, Sour Stomach, Heartburn and other distress go in five minutes and relieves at once such miseries as Belching of Gas, Eructations of sour undigested food, Nausea, Headaches, Dizziness, Constipation and other stomach disorders.

Some folks have tried so long to find relief from Indigestion and Dyspepsia or an out-of-order stomach with the common every-day cures advertised that they have about made up their minds that they have something else wrong or believe theirs is a case of Nervousness, Gastritis, Catarrh of the Stomach or Cancer.

This, no doubt, is a serious mistake. Your real trouble is, what you eat does not digest; instead it ferments and sours, turns to acid, Gas and Stomach poison, which putrefy in the digestive tract and intestines, and, besides, poison the breath with nauseous odours.

A hearty appetite, with thorough digestion, and without the slighest discomfort or misery of the stomach, is waiting for you as soon as you decide to try Pape's Diapepsin.

Doubtful Praise.

Stippler—Did Miss Kittie admire your paintings? Dobber—I don't know. Stippler—What did she say about them? Dobber—That she could feel that I put a great deal of myself into my work. Stippler—Well, that's praise. Dobber—Is it? The picture I showed her was "Calves in the Meadow."

Music Lovers.

"How do you know those people are sincere lovers of music?"

"By the fact," replied Miss Cayenne, "that they compelled their youngest boy to stop trying to learn to play the piano."

Soup Marks.

Guest—You called "Minna." Is that the blood, the dark one or the old woman? Waiter—How do you know our cooks? Guest—By the soup.—Meggendorfer Blatter.

The Logical Cure for Sick Headache.

It is a mistake to endure a headache as a necessary affliction. It is equally a mistake to doctor it as simply a headache, for though you may relieve, you cannot cure it that way.

Only in rare cases is a headache caused by anything wrong with the head itself. The trouble lies in some impurity of the blood that irritates the delicate network of nerves and causes the ache. That is why every pulsation pouring in more blood, is so plainly felt.

Lessening the flow of blood to the head by means of a tight compress, an ice-bag, or some drug that acts on the heart and reduces the pulsations, sometimes gives temporary relief. But these measures have absolutely no effect on the blood impurity which was the cause of the whole trouble.

In practically every case this blood impurity would be removed from the system by the bowels, kidneys, skin or lungs, if these were all working right. It is the inactivity of one or more of them that allows the poisons to accumulate in the blood, and the headache is simply a symptom or warning that things are not right.

The way to put them right—to cure the root of the whole matter—is to take Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills. They act directly on the bowels, regulating them—on the kidneys, strengthening and stimulating them—on the skin, opening up the pores—and on the lungs, clearing the delicate membrane of any mucus which may have collected.

When these four great eliminating organs get working properly again all impurities are quickly taken out of the blood, and the unpleasant symptoms, of which the headache is one, disappear—not simply relieved, but cured.

You can take Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills with confidence, for they have a record of over half a century of remarkable cures.

Rev. A. L. Bowers, of Bristol, Tenn., tells how they cured him:

"I want you to know how much good your Indian Root Pills have done for me. I was troubled with terrible headaches and biliousness. I tried several doctors but they did me no good, and for fourteen years I suffered. The use of your pills has made a cure in my case."

The Tenderfoot Farmer

It was one of these experimental farmers, who put green spectacles on his cow and fed her shavings. His theory was that it didn't matter what the cow ate so long as she was fed. The questions of digestion and nourishment had not entered into his calculations.

It's only a "tenderfoot" farmer that would try such an experiment with a cow. But many a farmer feeds himself regardless of digestion and nutrition. He might almost as well eat shavings for all the good he gets out of his food. The result is that the stomach grows "weak" the action of the organs of digestion and nutrition are impaired and the man suffers the miseries of dyspepsia and the agonies of nervousness.

To strengthen the stomach, restore the activity of the organs of digestion and nutrition and brace up the nerves, use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It is an unfailing remedy, and has the confidence of physicians as well as the praise of thousands healed by its use.

In the strictest sense "Golden Medical Discovery" is a temperance medicine. It contains neither intoxicants nor narcotics, and is as free from alcohol as from opium, cocaine and other dangerous drugs. All ingredients printed on its outside wrapper.

Don't let a dealer delude you for his own profit. There is no medicine for stomach, liver and blood "just as good" as "Golden Medical Discovery."

An Organized Epidemic

It Cured, as Was Intended. Some Chronic Cases.

By MARTHA M'CULLOCH-WILLIAMS.

Copyright, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.

Minerva's name was one of fate's subtlest ironies, the girl was so far—so very far—from wise. Indeed, she knew no more than to be sweet and biddable to crabbed task mistresses. They were the Grimley sisters who had taken her, as they said daily, out of charity and to whom she served for hands, feet and eyes. She was rated sharply if she talked back, which was seldom, since she had rather a talent for silence than for speech.

The sisters were not consciously unkind. It was just that they had fallen into the way of fretting at everything. Life had defrauded them of the natural outlets—husbands and children. Therefore they made the most of such small worries as remained to maiden gentlewomen.

Minerva came to them when she was ten. For the next eight years her appetite and her trick of breaking things, especially those she was handling with utmost care, had served as vital grievances. But since she was full grown she ate much less and hardly ever let fall anything, no matter how fragile or precious; hence the Miss Grimleys had had to invent a new sin for her. They had chosen to find it in her possible future husband. According to their notion, she was always intent upon matrimony and scheming to ensnare whatever masculine person chance threw in her way.

The young circuit rider, for example; Jim Mace, the constable, who rode by the big gate every other day; the two Leonards, who farmed the lower place; even the young fellow clerking over at the crossroads—hadn't he actually tried to get board at the Grimley mansion? Dr. Bell, the one person who dared speak up to the sisters, rated them soundly for such suspicions. No wonder, he said, poor Minerva, as shy and modest as any white rose, was awkward, almost rude, indeed, to all the young fellows she encountered and therefore likely to die an old maid.

Miss Jane and Miss Abby nodded approval there. Minerva was to have everything when they were gone. It would be quite enough to keep her like a lady. Husbands were but worries most of the time. As for children, they shook their heads and sighed. Clearly, in their judgment, a woman was lucky to escape such things. Look at Minerva herself! Where would she be now if the Grimleys had not chosen that better part?

Dr. Bell, who had a tongue as rough and a heart as warm as his greatcoat, growled at them. After awhile, being a strategist, he did something else—something which at first blush made him laugh a great shouting laugh. When his wife asked the meaning of it he said enigmatically:

"Oh, I'm going to cure some chronic cases by provoking an epidemic."

And that was all she could get out of him, no matter how hard she tried. She could not try very hard, since, like the rest of the neighborhood, she was giving all her mind to the coming session of the synod.

It was to be a great occasion. Ministers, their wives, sons and daughters were coming by the score. Their number would not be too great, however, for the countryside's hospitality.

With no provocation whatever from the church Dr. Bell fixed it so the Grimleys would have rather more than a double share of the clerical influx—namely, Deacon Brown and his wife, Dr. Henshaw, a pulpit Samson, just beginning to look about him over the edges of weeds not yet rusty; Professor Balderson, famed for persuading money into college channels, and young Lee, not yet come to full ordination. How the doctor managed all this is not known. He was almost unscrupulous when it came to carrying out a plan. At least two other households were full of bitter jealousy over the parceling out of guests, but the guests did not suspect it—least of all those fated to sit at meat with the Grimleys.

Miss Jane was a famous cook. Miss Abby was past mistress at preserving. Minerva made cake that was simply heavenly, and black Susan was a miracle of efficient strength in the kitchen. So the visitors rejoiced that their lines had fallen as they had. Indeed, all through synod week they could not say enough in praise and gratitude to their hostesses. As a consequence Miss Jane and Miss Abby forgot either to scold or to suspect. Carried away by the tide of hospitable impulse, they showed for what they were—excellent gentlewomen of the first rank.

As for Minerva, she fairly blossomed. Even the most callous onlooker saw in her a new creature. She was so radiant, indeed, that before three days were out Professor Balderson, a seasoned bachelor, made up his mind to marry her if he could. He changed his mind after good Sister Brown had let fall words of wisdom.

"It's providential," she said, nodding toward Minerva and young Lee. "If ever anybody was cut out for a pastor's wife it's that sweet girl, and I'm mighty glad to believe both of them have found it out."

Slight observation brought the professor himself to the same belief. For half an hour he was right down crestfallen; then he flung up his head and actually whistled. Possibly the sight of Miss Jane had nothing to do with it. But certainly that afternoon and all through the days following he kept pretty close to her. Miss Jane was in a state of mind. It was plain as a pikestaff that that man Henshaw was making up to Sister Abby—Abby, who had never before tolerated anybody's courting.

"He must have bewitched her. That's all the way I can account for it," she confided, almost weeping, to the professor upon Saturday afternoon. "Something ought to be done about it. It's ridiculous at her time of life. I don't understand it a bit."

"No, but it may be the cooking. Dr. Henshaw's a good man, but not wholly above earth," the professor comforted wisely. "Besides, I can quite understand. A man's loneliness is something dreadful. He has just about had time to find out how much he misses his wife. In that he is worse off than I, who have been lonely so many years."

"Well, it was just because you chose to, Miss Jane snapped, then could have bitten her tongue.

The professor positively beamed over her intimation. "I wonder if you can be in the right," he murmured. "Honestly, now, dear Miss Jane, if—if I found myself greatly attracted by a most superior woman of suitable age do you think I should have any chance?"

"You'll have to find out for yourself. One woman never knows about another," Miss Jane retorted, but with a blush that would have done credit to Minerva.

The professor took her hand. "But suppose it is not another?" he asked. "Suppose I dare raise my eyes to you?"

If Miss Jane had felt what was coming the sudden certainty of it overwhelmed her. For the first and last time she fainted outright, and most gracefully notwithstanding her 150 pounds, upon the professor's shoulder.

Minerva came running to them, exclaiming anxiously: "Fetch Dr. Bell! And keep Aunt Abby away!"

Afternoon service was just about to begin. In the stir and confusion of getting the crowd inside the church it was easy to mask Miss Jane's faint as something else.

"Oh, I—I—turned my ankle," she herself said, sniffing the salts Sister Brown held under her nostrils.

"Then we must take you straight home," the professor said as one in authority, looking into her eyes while he nodded toward Minerva and her sweetheart.

"Don't you worry about Miss Abby," she said. "Just let them put you in the barouche and go along. Dr. Henshaw 'll see to it your sister gets home all right."

Then Dr. Bell exploded. When he could speak for laughing he said, wringing Miss Jane's hand heartily and beaming on the professor:

"It has worked splendidly. Get home, all of you. I'll tell Abby everything and make her likewise tell me."

"What has worked?" Miss Jane demanded, suddenly forgetting her turned ankle and stamping her foot. The doctor looked quizzically from her to Minerva, then on to the professor and young Lee, whence his eyes wandered to Miss Abby and her prim, just now coming up to them.

"My organized epidemic," he said, with another great laugh, "of matrimony, to be sure. It hurt my feelings to see three fine wives going to waste."

For once Miss Jane had no word ready. The professor was likewise silent. But young Lee spoke up manfully:

"You were exactly right, doctor, and no man could have done a better deed."

"So I can say 'Bless you, my children,' all round?" the doctor queried.

Young Lee's eyes twinkled. "Sure thing," he said. "You see, Dr. Henshaw begged me to fix things with Minerva so Miss Abby would have no excuse to make him wait."

"She didn't think of me, I suppose," Miss Jane said, sighing. The others smiled. Sister Brown spoke for all of them. "No; she didn't forget you," she said. "But all of us have seen how it would be these last three days."

The Tip Situation in Berlin.

Things have come to such a pass in Berlin that it is suggested the police be called upon to regulate the gratuities one shall give in a restaurant. The Berlin Waiters' association is considering a proposal to fix a scale that shall set 12 per cent as the tips for orders under 75 cents and 10 per cent on orders for more than that amount. The newspapers are in a fever of discussion, with the prevailing opinion that the public must be reconciled to present conditions. Incidents are related in which restaurant patrons who have given small tips have had the money flung in their faces or have been made the object of abusive language from the voracious waiters. The proprietors are accused of fostering the tip hungryness and of collecting a percentage of the waiters' tip receipts.

Not a Nature Student.

She was not a nature student, and when she saw a sparrow on the side walk, evidently too young to fly and too badly frightened even to hop, she did not know exactly what to do for it. She did not know how it had got there, where its parents were or what relief measures would be advisable. All she could do in her perplexity was to keep the group of boys who had gathered around it from harming it and to see if any of them could suggest a course of action, for she was well aware that in these days of nature study the veriest school infant knows more about birds and their like than many an older person.

Presently a big boy pushed through the group, looked at the bird kindly, then stooped and took it up. She was much relieved. "Will you take care of it?" she asked him. "Sure!" he responded, with inelegant emphasis. She was anxious that it should have the best of care, so she suggested helpfully, "Better give it a little milk."

The boy stared. Then he grinned; then he yelled. "Milk!" he roared "Milk! Ha, milk!" Then he streaked up the street, carrying the bird carefully in his hands and derisively ejaculating, "Milk!"

Her face flushed as she went on her way, and she was heard to murmur to herself: "Now, I wonder why I laughed. Very unmannerly, I'm sure."—New York Press.

Ground For Appeal.

"You are fined $50 for speeding," remarked the court.

"What," ejaculated the autoist, "only $50! I shall appeal. I'm agent for the car I was using, and my rival, whose old thrashing machine couldn't go half the clip I was making, you soaked for a hundred."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Everyone Thought She Was Going Into Consumption.

Gained Ten Pounds in Two Weeks by the Use of Burdock Blood Bitters.

Mrs. Fred. Biggs, Kingston, Ont., writes:—"I was completely run down, my blood was out of order, and I used to get so weak I would be compelled to stay in bed for weeks at a time. I could not eat, was pale and thin; every one thought I was going into consumption. I tried everything and different doctors until a friend advised me to use Burdock Blood Bitters. I did not have one bottle used when my appetite began to improve. I used six bottles. I gained ten pounds in two weeks. When I began to take it I only weighed ninety-three pounds. It just seemed to pull me from the grave as I never expected to be strong again. I will tell every sufferer of your wonderful medicine."

The blood reaches every portion of the body to distribute nutriment and remove effete matter and waste products. Clearly then, any influence, good or bad, affecting the blood, must necessarily affect the entire system for good or evil as the case may be.

Get pure blood and keep it pure by removing every trace of impure morbid matter from the system by using Burdock Blood Bitters. It exerts a curative influence unapproached by any other remedy.

ADRIFT THREE DAYS.

Nova Scotia Fishermen Have Terrible Experience In Storm.

Halifax, Dec. 3.—At 3 o'clock on Monday morning George Repool, aged 55 years, and his son, Ray, aged 20, sailed from Westport in a twenty-foot open gasoline boat fitted for trawling. They failed to return with the rest of the fishing fleet, and as the greatest gale of the season prevailed from Monday until early yesterday morning, everybody believed that their little craft had blown to sea or foundered while endeavoring to make port. About one o'clock yesterday afternoon they were picked up some twenty miles off shore, near Trinity Ledge, by the schooner Augusta Evelyn and landed in Westport in an exhausted condition. The men are unable to give a full account of their terrible experience, but as near as can be learned their engine became disabled after the squall struck them on Monday morning. They anchored their little craft four miles off shore, and two miles west of Grand Passage, where they rode out the gale three days and three nights without food and with very little water.

Early yesterday morning, when they had hope of being seen from land, their anchor rope parted, and they drifted to sea, not being picked up until they were more than twenty miles from home.

Judges Overworked.

Montreal, Dec. 3.—It is understood that apart, from the nomination of several superior court judges, some new circuit court justices will be appointed. Although the present judges, Lebuf, Dorion and Purcel, are working under full steam, they are no less than three thousand cases behind against 2,000 cases this time last year.

In eleven months the three judges named have given over twelve thousand judgments. In spite of all this work, they only receive $3,000 per annum, against the $7,000 salary of the superior court judges and $5,000 received by the police magistrates.

Suicides While on Honeymoon.

Salt Lake City, Dec. 3.—Threatened with eviction from the hotel where he has been staying with his bride, because he could not pay his bill, Capt. W. A. Johnson, a well-known mining expert, took cyanide of potassium Wednesday and was found dead in his room. Acquaintances say that Johnson was formerly manager of the Guggenheim mining properties in Nicaragua and South America, served Cecil Rhodes in South Africa and made a brilliant record in the Boer war under the British flag. He is said to have spent a fortune in mining claims in Nevada.

Two Killed by Falling Wall.

Londonderry, N.S., Dec. 3.—A falling wall in the foundry of the Londonderry Iron Works killed two men and injured two others. The dead are Alex. McLean and Walter McCully. The foundry is divided by a brick fire wall, some fifty feet high, that obtrudes three feet above the roof. For three days there had been heavy gale, and it is thought that vibration of building weakened the wall, causing collapse. Fifteen feet of the top of the wall came down, bringing a part of the roof, and burying the victims under tons of wreckage.

What the Consumer Pays.

Washington, D.C., Dec. 3.—U. S. Secretary Wilson has just finished a unique investigation made for the purpose of this report, relating to the increase of wholesale prices of beef when sold at retail. For the 50 cities the total retail cost charged to customers above the wholesale cost paid by the retailers is 38 per cent. In five cities, the rate of increase is 20 per cent. or under; in 10 cities, 21 to 30 per cent.; in 12 cities, 31 to 40 per cent.; in 12 cities, 41 to 50 per cent.; and in 11 cities, over 50 per cent.

Put Curb on Wall Street.

Washington, Dec. 3.—The President has become convinced that speculation in railroad securities plays far too important a part in the affairs of the banks of the great commercial centres, and especially of New York City, and in the preparation of his annual message he is striving to frame recommendations outlining legislation which, in addition to giving added character and stability to railroad stocks and bonds, will tend to minimize this evil.

Brockville, Dec. 3.—In shoving an elderly man from the railway track saving his life, W. J. Harper, aged 21 a G. T. R. employe who was riding in front of a switch engine, had his left foot mangled.

.It Takes 21 Days to Make Each Cake

Three weeks are required from start to finish of the cake of Taylor's Infants' Delight Soap that you get at your dealer's.

We have put forty-four years of experience into this soap.

We bring our olive oil and cocoanut oil ten thousand miles—none but the highest grade will do. We use otto of roses that costs us ten dollars an ounce.

These oils are filtered through Fuller's earth. They are boiled and then boiled again, with hundreds of gallons of pure water, passing through to remove all possible impurity.

Infants' Delight Soap

A pressure of thirty tons removes the water. Then the soap is stamped into cakes and again inspected for any possible flaw.

Ordinary fresh or "green" soap is not hard and firm. It wastes away quickly.

We put Infants' Delight Soap through eight separate "agings" until it is hard and firm and ready for immediate use. It will wear as thin as a wafer.

Infants' Delight Soap will make your skin like velvet. It is the mildest soap made—the best for the infant and equally good for grown-ups.

For insuring against chaps and roughness no soap can take its place. Get a cake today.

Morgan Secures Equitable.

New York, Dec. 3.—Control of the Equitable Life Assurance Society, which was secured by Thomas Fortune Ryan, after the insurance scandals of several years ago, has passed to J. Pierpont Morgan, with the $472,000,000 of assets which the company declared in its last statement. The transfer, apart from its magnitude, marks a complete reversal of the old order under which the insurance companies controlled the destinies of the banks and trust companies.

Prohibit Sewage In Toronto Harbor.

Ottawa, Dec. 3.—Senator Belcourt's bill prohibiting any person from depositing sewage in a navigable water or tributary applies in its present terms to the City of Toronto, unless the treatment of the sewage before it is deposited in the water is such that there is no pollution.

The health committee of the Senate will make a report on evidence collected last session, and this report may exercise some influence on the bill.

Italian Cabinet Resigns.

Rome, Dec. 3.—The announcement of the resignation of the whole Italian Cabinet was made yesterday by Premier Giolitti, following the failure of the Chamber of Deputies to pass the bill presented by the Government as a measure of fiscal reform.

The Government had proposed the reduction of indirect taxation on necessities, the loss of revenue from this source to be offset by a progressive income tax.

Vance Not Their Man.

Hamilton, Dec. 3.—The Hamilton Bridge Works Co. has issued a statement in which it says that James Vance, who testified that he had given the reeve of East Zorra $50 to secure a contract for a bridge, was not employed by the company when negotiating for the bridge. It says that it never authorized anyone to give money to secure a contract, and will take steps to protect its name.

Where Did the Money Go To?

Cincinnati, Dec. 3.—More than half of the $643,000, which Charles L. Warriner, former local treasurer of the Big Four Railroad, admits to have been stolen from the railroad, cannot be accounted for. The indicted treasurer has finished a statement which accounts for $318,000, $84,000 of which he says he was paid in blackmail, and claims that the balance of $325,000 was lost in speculation.

Moving Pictures.

The tiresome vibratory effect so often seen when bioscope or kinetograph pictures are thrown on the screen is not due to the passage of the film itself across the front of the lantern, but to the shutter, which cuts off the light at rapidly repeated intervals during the motion of the film. By simply increasing the frequency of interposition of this shutter from fourteen to fifty-six times a second—that is, by using a motor working at four times the usual speed—this painful vibratory sensation is completely suppressed.

Rodin's Statue of Hugo.

Rodin's statue of Victor Hugo, which was the subject of much criticism when it was exhibited at the Paris salon, has been erected in the garden of the Palais Royal. The poet is shown resting against a massive rock in a ruminating attitude. "In conception the work is as daring," writes an artist from Paris to a Brussels paper, "as the Balzac by Rodin; but, while the latter represents the poet wrapped in a gown so completely that only the head is visible, Hugo's form is devoid of clothing of any kind."

TO PREVENT GAMBLING

Some Are Afraid That It Will Injure the Horse Breeding Industry If the Incentive Is Removed From Race Meetings—Hon. Mr. Aylesworth Says More Opinions Should Be Heard on the Subject.

Ottawa, Dec. 3.—The anti-race track gambling bill was the chief business before the Commons yesterday.

H. H. Miller of South Grey, when the bill came up for the second reading, explained that his object was to prevent utterly pool-making, bookmaking and the business of gambling and betting on race tracks. The bill, however, did not endeavor to interfere with the racing of horses, nor to prevent private betting. The reasons why he sought an amendment of the criminal code in this regard were:

1. It had been asked for by the Moral and Reform Association of Canada. He denied the assertion that no laymen had asked for this reform. Laymen, as well as clergymen, were behind the movement, he said.

2. Many states of the American union had passed similar legislation, including New York, California, Louisiana and Michigan, four of the greatest horse-breeding states. Mr. Miller asked for serious consideration of the effect of the passing of this legislation by these states. Canada had been flooded with American bookmakers, and one grand jury had declared that Ontario had now become a paradise for gamblers. Japan, in order to build up a strong people, had passed anti-betting legislation.

3. For economic reasons. During thirteen days' racing at the Woodbine, one Toronto newspaper had stated that the people had placed $2,000,000 in the custody of American bookmakers.

4. Race track gambling did much to deteriorate good clean manly sport.

F. D. Monk said, so far as he had observed the invasion of American bookmakers had not reached Montreal. In Quebec they had a principle that horse-racing led to the improvement of breed, and races could not be held without prizes, betting and even bookmaking, that is if these races were to be a success. He himself would not like it to be understood that he approved of the abuses connected with betting, but he held that it was impossible to carry on successfully the operation of racing without allowing that form of betting conducted by bookmakers.

J. B. McColl, West Northumberland, said that the bill ought to be placed in the hands of a special committee of the House.

Major Beattie considered that this was a matter with which the Ontario Legislature ought to deal. He said he had been on the race track in Toronto once or twice, but saw nothing at all like what Mr. Miller described.

"The member for South Grey," said Major Beattie, "told a most pathetic story about a small boy going home with $2 in his pocket. I saw a boy going home with a dollar in his pocket and I asked him how he got it. He said that ten little newsboys had each put a ticket in a hat and had each put in ten cents and he happened to draw the lucky ticket. The hon. member calls that gambling. There is no gambling about it at all.

"I know of no race track in this country that amounts to much except the Woodbine in Toronto, and it is a credit to Canada.

"We did have a batch of Americans who came over to Fort Erie and set up a race track and another similar institution was established at Windsor. These men should have been put out of the country. They were not Canadians and their race tracks are not desirable, but they should have been dealt with by the Government of the Province of Ontario, and not the Government.

"If the effect of this bill would be to do away with gambling in this country, I would be glad to support it, but there is other gambling in Canada far worse than race track gambling, which is not affected by this proposed legislation.

Samuel Barker said he would welcome the fullest enquiry into the question, but considered that the proposed legislation would do harm to horse breeding.

Hon. A. B. Aylesworth, who spoke after a number of members had been heard, many of them in favor of the bill, dwelt upon the difficulties of legislating upon a subject of this kind, for by the average man the making of a bet was not considered to be in itself a crime. Therefore, the bill proposed to make by statute a crime of what was not regarded as a crime.

The whole question resolved itself into a question of policy. Hundreds and hundreds of petitions had been received on the subject. There had been some from his own constituency, and they were signed by the substantial men, the backbone of the county whose views they could not afford to disregard. As evidenced by the petitions, there was a strong body of public sentiment on this question, but the public sentiment was by no means unanimous. If they accepted Mr. Miller's legislation they would destroy such corporate bodies as the Woodbine Association, and others at Montreal and Winnipeg, etc.

He suggested that the bill be referred to a committee, and after both sides had been heard they would be in a much better position to come to a judgment regarding the question.

Hon. Charles Murphy, Secretary of State, who followed Mr. Aylesworth, was inclined to resent the attitude of the people, not members of the House, who undertake to tell Parliament what laws it shall, or shall not, pass.

Mr. Murphy suggested that the bill will be sent to a committee, where he proposes to move an amendment which would prevent newspapers printing information as to betting.

Hon. George P. Graham said that while he was prepared to vote for the bill on its merits, it was only fair that it should be referred to a special committee where those opposed to it would have an opportunity of being heard. He expressed the opinion that the insanity which affects a portion of the people of Canada in respect to the game of "bridge" was training our children to be racing touts and bookmakers. Mr. Graham confessed a liking for the sport of horse racing, but, nevertheless, he was in sympathy with the provisions of the bill.

The bill was then read a second time and referred to the following committee of seven: J. B. McColl, H. H. Millar, F. D. Monk, Richard Blain, W. H. Martin, J. H. Sinclair, and J. R. Stratton.

Lawyer Patrick, sentenced to life imprisonment for murder, yesterday failed in his appeal to the Appellate Court at New York for his release. Patrick argued his own case. He has tried several times before.

Will Ruin Britain.

London, Dec. 3.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—Lord Charles Beresford, speaking at Portsmouth, said that for the four years the Government have wasted, every year has brought the country lower in strength and credit to its defensive force. Put them into power once more and the end is sure; the army will be further reduced, the navy will continue to be starved, and its present disorganization grow worse, and the dominions beyond the seas be finally and forever alienated. Britain will cease to be great, and the power of the British Empire will pass away.

Widow Charged With Murder.

St. Louis, Dec. 3.—An information charging the murder of William J. Erder, was issued Wednesday against Mrs. Loren B. Doxey of Columbus, Neb., following the discovery of arsenic in Erder's stomach by the coroner's chemist. Mrs. Doxey was arrested Wednesday night on a warrant charging bigamy.

The arrest and investigation was mainly due to Erder's sister, Miss Kate Erder, who traced her brother's wife two months to Columbus, and found her living there as the wife of Dr. Doxey.

Attempt at Suicide.

Hamilton, Dec. 3.—At noon yesterday Ronald McDonald, 60 years of age, deliberately threw himself in front of a moving street car at the corner of James and Vine streets. He was rolled under the fender, but the motorman stopped the car before any serious damage was done. McDonald was arrested on the charge of attempting suicide. He is a tailor and had been on a spree.

TEAM RAN AWAY

Horses Belonging to Mr. Graham of Smith Made Exciting Run.

An exciting runaway occurred on George street this afternoon about half-past two, when a team, attached to a heavy waggon, belonging to Mr. J. Graham, of Smith, became frightened at a street car and started away. The team ran at a very fast rate and collided with a buggy standing in front of Hooper's store, throwing it on to the sidewalk. The runaway was stopped about Central Park. No damage of any account was done.

A WEATHER SIGN

First Thursday of Every Season Denotes Weather Throughout.

The fact that yesterday was the first Thursday of Winter may not have been recognised, particularly by the majority of people, but there are a few, at any rate, who paid special attention to the direction from which the wind was blowing. To many of the older settlers the first Thursday of any season is the test day for winter, and the weather throughout will, to a certain extent, be very similar to that which characterised the day of the test. Even those who are inclined to be skeptical and laugh at other alleged signs, say that the first Thursday of the winter season means more than might be supposed. Yesterday the wind blew from the east around to the north east, a composition of weather that will be anything if agreeable should there be anything in the story of the first Thursday. This does not mean that the wind will never vary from the east, but the idea is that for the most part it will come from that direction. This will mean cold and disagreeable weather, so the first Thursday people say.

You can't dodge them all. Mosquito bites, sunburn, bruises, skin injuries. Some of them will attack you this season sure. Have a tin of Davis' Menthol Salve on hand. 25 cents.

THE YOUNG GIRL WAS INCORRIGIBLE

Jennie Duncan Told a Story of a Mythical Home in Allandale to Family Who Sheltered Her.

WAS TAKEN TO TORONTO

Jennie Duncan, a twelve year old Peterborough girl, was taken to Toronto yesterday by Mr. Geo. Cochrane, agent for the local branch of the Children's Aid Society and lodged in the Industrial School, where she will in all probability spend the next two years. The girl is regarded by the authorities as incorrigible and certainly the record she has made for herself would lead one to belive that the diagnosis of the Society's officers was correct in every particular.

The Society found a comfortable home for the girl where she was kindly treated and carefully looked after, but she would not be contented there and persisted in running away from her home. On the first occasion she was speedily located by Mr. Cochrane and taken back, but two weeks ago she again slipped away and the Society's agent did not succeed in tracing her until Wednesday.

It appears that she started for school, but threw her books over a fence and disappeared. No trace of her was found until Tuesday when she went to a house in the south end of the city and asked to be sheltered. To her benefactors there she told a story that she lived at Allandale and that she had come into the city with her father's hired man, that the latter had become intoxicated and had lost her in the street. She was sure that her father would be in the city looking for her the next day, and believing her story the family upon which she called took her in and kept her until the next day.

Mr. Cochrane learned of her presence there and went down. The girl emphatically denied that she was Jennie Duncan. "Jennie Duncan is my cousin," she said, "but my name is Sarah Duncan, and I live in Allandale. If you don't believe me you can 'phone down and find out."

A telephone conversation with Allandale revealed the fact that nothing was known of the girl there and accordingly Mr. Cochrane brought her to the office of Mr. E. L. Goodwill, the solicitor for the Society. Here she again denied that she was Jennie Duncan. However, Mr. Goodwill had in his possession a note signed by the girl in which she had expressed her sorrow for running away on a previous occasion. She was asked to write "Jennie Duncan" and did so after some hesitation and then on being requested to write "Sarah Duncan", the name she claimed as her own, could not spell the name beyond "S-a," thus giving the game away.

It was determined to send her to the school in Toronto, as the Society was of the opinion that nothing could be done for her here.

THE WEATHER.

The beautiful weather of the past few days (more like September than December) is in marked contrast with the same period last year. Last year on December 2nd the ground was covered with several inches of snow, and on the 4th there was sufficient for sleighing. On the 6th it was 5 degrees below zero, and on the 16th, 19 degrees below (the coldest day last winter.) As a matter of fact, winter began on December 2nd, and sleighing continued until March 9th, without interruption, excepting for a few days from January 26th to 28th, when a thaw played havoc with the sleighing.

CAPTAIN BERNIER TO BE WELCOMED

Captain Bernier will meet with a hearty reception this evening at the Collegiate Auditorium as the distinguished gentleman will be presented with an address of welcome by Mayor Rush on behalf of the City Council and the citizens of Peterborough.

The Hon. J. R. Stratton will occupy the chair in deference to the personal request of the famous lecturer.

Captain Bernier's lecture will be illustrated throughout with a most unique set of lantern views, showing life in the far north, as he found it on his several expeditions to that wonderful country. He will also have with him a number of the records and relics deposited by the famous explorer, Sir John Franklin, who lost his life in polar travel. These curios were left in the north in 1880, and naturally are extremely interesting for their historic associations.

"Has the North Pole been discovered?" Captain Bernier will answer this question and tell who he believes was actually there.

GYPSIES VISIT COST THE COUNTY NEARLY $175.00

The gypsies who were taken into custody west of Peterborough, about the middle of last June, and who provided a big free circus for the citizens, were responsible for an expense of $167.24 upon the county.

This is one of the items that appears on the Finance Committee's report, and which will be paid when the report is adopted to-morrow. This sum included the maintenance of the nomadic Mexicans, their trial, enquiries about them, and in various other ways. The county should be thankful that the gypsies, during their incarceration did not undertake a warfare against dirt for the soap bill would certainly have been a tidy item.

THE TRENTON AGREEMENT HAS BEEN SET ASIDE

Toronto, Dec. 2.—Chief Justice Mulock this morning handed down judgment setting aside the agreement entered into by the corporation of the town of Trenton and the Trenton Electric and Water Co., Limited, whereby the latter was given the right to utilise the surplus water from a drain constructed by the Dominion Government in the Trent River within the limits of the town in building the Trent Canal, and over which the town had been given the rights. The judgment also quashes the by-law passed by the Council, and grants a perpetual injunction, as asked by the plaintiff, but the injunction is not to affect any right the company possesses independently of the agreement. The company is to pay Mr. Arch Abbott's, the plaintiffs', costs, but no order is made as to who shall pay the towns' costs.

Arch. Abbot, Trenton, brought the action on his own behalf and the behalf of all the other ratepayers of the town.

Chief Justice Mulock thought that the agreement should have been submitted to the electors in the form of a by-law, as provided by the Act.

THE MACHINE TELEPHONES FOR LINDSAY

Mr. F. D. McKay, general manager of the Canadian Machine Telephone Co., was in town to-day in connection with the alterations and renovations being made to the premises on William St., to be used as a central office for the company.

Mr. C. E. Hulfish, engineer of the company, was in town a few days ago, and made a distribution study of the town.

In conversation with The Post this afternoon Mr. McKay stated that the company would have their system in operation in Lindsay about the beginning of the new year.—Lindsay Warder.

HAD EXCITING EXPERIENCES

Captain Bernier, Famous Arctic Explorer, Has Been Through Some Arduous Adventures in the Northland.

LECTURES HERE TO-NIGHT

The Toronto Star has the following very interesting article on Captain Bernier, the Arctic explorer who lectures before the Peterborough Astronomical Society to-night.

Capt. Bernier is here. The jaunty old seaman, who skips off a street car like a youngling, and walks like a thirsty traveller with an oasis in sight, is at the Queen's Hotel for a couple of days. The ruddy-faced captain of the Arctic, home from the "farthest north" of Canadian exploring expeditions, doesn't show his age a bit. His trim, close cropped gray moustache and his jaunty gold-braided cap set him off well. He has commanded a ship for 40 years and six months, which is six months more than his father before him, but no body would guess it. He has a roll ing gait, to be sure, but that he comes by honestly, for his father and his grandfather, his father's cousins and uncles and himself have commanded ships for an aggregate of 700 years, which he says is just about a record.

Capt. Bernier as might be expected, has somewhat of a French accent. They were mostly Frenchmen on the Arctic, and during the long winter Sabbaths at Melville Island they said their prayers like good Catholics. Nearly a year they spent there, and a year of monotony it was. There was little that could be done, and even smoking and story-wrapping became tiresome.

One Narrow Escape.

"Narorw escapes are something I seldom have," remarked the captain this morning, when asked about his own experiences in the frozen north. "The only escape I had this trip was at Byam Martin, aobut 75 degrees north. I had landed with a party to leave records there, but we got a signal from the ship to come back. We hurried. I was well in advance, and I tapped the ice with my stick as I went along, for the tide had fallen three feet. My stick made no impression on that ice, but I did. First thing I knew I was through, my gun strapped across my back, saving me from going under altogether. Also I spread out my arms as I went down.

"I got out of that hole as quickly as I could. The others were laughing at me, and I did not like it, so I was out almost as soon as I was in. You know how a person feels on such an occasion. Well, that's the way I felt.

"Catch cold? Not a bit of it. Nobody caught cold up north. They could get soaked to the skin in the coldest atmosphere and nothing would result from it. But when we came back to fresh water we all got cold I don't think that there is any harm in salt water, even when it is chilly.

McMillan's Narrow Squeeze.

"Accidents? We didn't lose a man, but one of your Toronto scientists had a narorw squeeze. It was at Melville Island, and he started out across a bay to look at the coal deposits which exist there. His name is J. G. McMillan, and he is a mining man. This time he went out without his gun In fact, he was armed only with a kit of instruments which he uses in his business. Half way across the bay his route crossed that of a bear. They did not see each other until quite close, and the first thing the bear did was to stand up on his hind legs and paw the air. McMillan did not like it a bit, but he did the best he could under the circumstances; he swung his kit of instruments around his head. The bear concluded that it had never seen an animal just like that and decided to go away.

"It is a safe rule," added the captain, "never to go alone in those northern lands. Nobody ever knows what he will meet."

Lot of Animals.

"Were there many animals seen?"

"I should say there were, especially on Melville Island. But human kind has gone eastward. The Esquimaux were not there. The American hunters are up in the northlands, however, and they came on board the ship and boasted of their luck. Well, I just said to them, "Gentlemen, I have planted the flag up here, and you must pay your license, and they had to pay. I collected $50 from Harry Whitney, the American millionaire, and others who visit the far north must now pay tribute as well.

"One year I found a dead man at one of the places I visited. He had killed himself. This trip, however, we found everybody we knew of alive."

"Did you find many plants on Melville Island?"

"Thirty-six varieties of flowers. It is almost a garden."

Will Make Another Trip.

Captain Bernier says that he has secured the Arctic again, and will once more go North, but just what his route will be he does not know. "The north-west passage was open before me last trip," he says, "and it almost broke my heart not to go, but I had my orders."

As to Cook and Peary, he thinks that both got near to the Pole, if they did not reach it.

The captain visited the observatory here to-day to deposit documents he found at various northern points. These included a record of temperature in the far North from 1850 to 1853, taken by McClure on board the S.S. Investigator. He has a number of relics of his trip, and will probably make arrangements to place these on exhibition here. He had with him to-day a very interesting parchment which he discovered on the north-east hill of Winter Harbour, Melville Island. This was a record left by Explorer Parry. With it were several old coins, a penny of 1797, a penny of 1806, and a shilling of 1817.

For even in the untravelled north man finds to-day the signs and records of brave men who have gone before.

THINK HE IS THE MAN WANTED

Kingston Police Make a Capture—Believe He is the One Who Committed a Dastardly Assault Upon a Young Girl.

SHE IS RECOVERING

Kingston, Ont., Dec. 3.—The police think they have the man who brutally assaulted little Catherine Stanford last Thursday night. A man who gives his name as Andrew Jackson, and his age as 57, was captured last night after an exciting chase. He had been loitering about the girl's home and accosted Cora Marshall, who lives next door. Miss Marshall recognized the man by the description given and cried: "There's the man, whereupon the chase started. Miss Stanford's life was for a time despaired of, but she is beginning to improve.

J. E. Broderick For Inspector

Mr. G. E. Broderick was the choice of a special joint committee representing Victoria and Peterborough townships for the position of Public School Inspector of the new inspectorate comprising parts of these two counties. Mr. Broderick is a Lindsay man and is highly recommended by the representatives from Victoria County. After Dr. Merchant's address this morning the Council went into committee of the whole the minutes of which are as follows:

"Dr. Merchant representing the the Minister of Education stated that the Victoria Council is, he understands, willing to enter into an agreement that the Townships of Ennismore, Smith, Harvey and Galway and Cavendish in this County should be united with Lindsay, Verulam, Omemee, Bobcaygeon, Emily and Somerville of Victoria County to form one school inspectorate."

Moved by Mr. J. Knox, of Havelock, seconded by Mr. J. Brown, of Monaghan, that this committee approve of an inspectorate being established, formed by those parts of Peterborough and Victoria Counties above designated, with power to the County of Victoria to substitute the township of Ops for Emily and Omemee as they see fit.

Moved by Mr. Frank Moher, of Douro, seconded by Mr. Purdue, of Ennismore, that this committee approve of an agreement being made that the proportion of time of the inspector shall be given in each of said Counties, and the proportion of salary and travelling expenses of the inspector shall be determined, borne and paid for by the Counties interested, on a basis of the number of teachers in each County respectively in said inspectorate.

Moved by Mr. J. W. Russell, of Belmont and Mr. A. J. Kidd, of Lakefield, that the Reeves of Smith, Emily, Harvey and Galway and Cavendish and the Deputy Reeve of Smith be a separate committee to confer with the committee appointed by the County of Victoria to nominate an inspector of the suggested inspectorate and to determine any other necessary matters in connection with the proposed arrangements.

This afternoon the special committee composed of Warden Scott, J. E. Boat, of Emily, Robt. Shaw, of Harvey, C. Coben, of Galway and Cavendish and Thos. Graham, Deputy Reeve of Smith met with the deputation from Victoria County in a joint committee.

On motion of Messrs. Shaw and Perdue, Mr. G. A. Jordan, Warden of Victoria, was elected chairman of the committee. The several applications for the inspectorate were then read by the celrk of Victoria, Mr. McNeillie as follows: Messrs. J. A. Morgan, G. E. Broderick, J. Davidson, H. G. Martyn, C. Edwards, N. McEachern, J. olling, R A. Hutchison.

On motion of Mr. B. L. McLean, 1st Deputy Reeve of Lindsay, and Mr. M. Perdue, of Ennismore, the application of Mr. Broderick was accepted.

This completed the business. The report of the joint committee will have to be passed in by-law form in the Council to-morrow, recommending Mr. Broderick's appointment.

NEW SCHOOL INSPECTORATE AS OUTLINED BY DR. MERCHANT

ROBERT SHAW,
Reeve of Harvey and Member of the County Council—He has been Chairman of the House of Refuge Committee This Year.

Proposed Union of Peterborough and Victoria Counties for Purpose of Creating New Public School Inspectorate—Deputation From Victoria County in Peterborough To-day.

DR. MERCHANT'S ADDRESS

The County Council undertook the consideration of the most important question of the session this morning when Dr. Merchant, representing the Department of Education asked them to take up the matter of uniting with the County of Victoria for the purpose of forming a new Public School Inspectorate. A deputation from Victoria county composed of the following gentlemen was present: Warden G. A. Jordan, Messrs. B. L. McLean, 1st Deputy Reeve of Lindsay, W. W. Jordan, 2nd Deputy Reeve, Emmerson Tiers, Reeve of Verulam, Jos. T. Beatty, Reeve of Omemee, J. R. Boat, Reeve of Emily, J. C. Bing, Reeve of Bobcaygeon, and R. A. Callam, Reeve of Somerville.

All the members of the Peterborough Council were present when the Warden called the meeting to order. Reeve Breault, of Norwood, moved that the deputation be heard, but Mr. Beatty, of Omemee, in reply stated that Dr. Merchant was present and he thought it was preferable that he should be heard first.

Dr. Merchant dealt in detail with every side of the proposal and emphasized the necessity of viewing the change, not from the standpoint of representatives of Peterborough County or Victoria County, but should reach their decisions, considering only the welfare of the children of the townships that may be effected. The case of these counties is only a part of the general scheme of the Department to equally divide the inspectorates. Each inspector should have from 90 to 100 schools in his district and it was necessary that Peterborough and Victoria determine the schools that will constitute the new inspectorate. Owing to certain conditions the proposed change in this case had required more attention than all the other counties of the province that have been reorganized in a similar manner.

Dr. Merchant's Scheme.

The inspectorate Dr. Merchant had arranged was composed of the Counties of Smith with 13 schools, Ennismore 3, Harvey 8, Galway and Cavindish 5, a total of 32 from Peterborough and the townships of Emily, Verulam and Somerville and the municipalities of Omemee, Bobcaygeon and

"THE OPTIMIST"

New Calgary Paper is as Breezy as the Western Prairies.

The Examiner has received a copy of the first number of "The Optimist" a weekly newspaper of comment published in Calgary, Alberta. The new publication has every earmark of being a popular success and is excellent, both from a literary and from a mechanical standpoint. It is written in a style that is as breezy as the Western prairies, and its utterances ring true. "The Optimist" is especially interesting from a Peterborough standpoint, inasmuch as Mr. T. A. Slight, formerly of the Examiner news room, is on the mechanical staff of the new publication.

MILK AND WATER.

The Review, under the heading "What do you think of this?" comments upon an article reprinted from the Ottawa Journal, upholding Canadian autonomy, and pretends to be shocked at the boldness yith which the "separationists are coming to the aid of Sir Wilfrid Laurier on his independence of Canada policy." In the first place the critic has to resort to straight misrepresentation to give point to its little point. The Ottawa Journal is about as much "independent Liberal" as the Toronto News. It is owned and published by Mr. P. D. Ross, formerly Conservative candidate in Ottawa, and presently president of the Conservative Association of that city. Having begun with a misstatement, the Review continues misstating when it represents Hon. G. P. Graham flouting a British Governor in Montreal. The Review knows, as the public knows, that the statement attributed to Mr. Graham was, as he declares, never made, and was due to the error of a reporter. This matter would not be worthy of so much attention were it not used to show the utter unreliability of the local Conservative organ in its present state of journalistic degeneration and senility. But the Review will not be taken seriously, as the following beautiful bit of rubbish within which it concludes its comments will serve to show:

"So determined is the Laurier Government to pander to the racial prejudices and aspirations of its chief support that it is not too much to say that British connection is in imminent danger."

Mr. Monk, of Jacques Cartier, the leader of the Quebec Conservatives, in the House on Wednesday, in discussing the adoption of the supplementary convention of the Franco-Canadian treaty, spoke of the value of sentiment in even such matters as commercial treaties as balancing even substantial material advantages. The British preference, extended by Sir Wilfrid Laurier and founded largely on sentiment, has, however, yielded important, substantial fruits; it has done more to fortify the ties that bind us to the Motherland to strengthen British connection, than all the "Canadians in the Imperial service."

Without seriously combatting the vapoury hallucinations of the Review regarding the danger to British connection from the Laurier Government it may be suggested that facility of intercourse and ease of communication constitute strong bonds of union, and in this connection it may be mentioned that Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, Postmaster-General in the Laurier Government is in Great Britain at this moment for the purpose of procuring the cheapening of postal and cable rates between Great Britain and Canada, another evidence of the Empire-wrecking policy of the Laurier government, which exists only in the disgruntled gray matter of our Chambers street contemporary.

THE BURDEN OF RESPONSIBILITY.

The tone and temper of parliamentary discussion depend upon the responsibility of the speaker. This was illustrated on Wednesday in the two speeches made upon the motion of Hon. Mr. Foster for correspondence in respect of the alleged contravention of the Rush-Bagot treaty by the United States in maintaining upon the Great Lakes, a number of armed vessels, in excess of the restrictions imposed by the convention. Mr. Foster submitted statements showing that the United States had on these lakes and in commission, ten vessels, aggregating 8,000 tons, and carrying 56 guns, whereas the treaty only permitted four vessels of a total tonnage of 400 tons, and four guns. He asserted that the lake commerce of Canada was at the mercy of the United States in case of hostilities between the two countries arising, and suggested in moderate terms enough some modification of the treaty. The present state of things ought not, he said, to exist. Mr. Foster could speak freely of these things because he had no responsibility, in respect of any action to be taken, but Sir Wilfrid upon whom rests the responsibility of taking action if action is taken, as well as the result of that action, said that the observations of Mr. Foster would have been more apposite, if, when calling the attention of the country to the conditions on the great lakes, he had been able to suggest a remedy. The Rush-Bagot agreement had been in existence for nearly one hundred years, and it had served a very good purpose. Since the United States had reached the developmen it had, the states bordering on the lakes had again and again pressed the Federal authorities to be allowed to participate in the war expenditure which had been going on, but they could not do so unless the conditions of the agreement of 1817 were interefered with. Continuing, he said:

"I must say that though perhaps the terms of that agreement have not been absolutely maintained, I am not prepared to say that they have been unfairly interfered with. My hon. friend knows that the tenure of life of that agreement hangs on a very slender thread. It can be put an end to in six months—if the American Government were to press us they could put an end to the treaty in six months. That is stipulated in the treaty. Under such circumstances what are we to do? My hon. friend says there should be a modification. That is easily said, more easily said than done. He may say 'Put an end to the treaty.' That would be worse, for if the treaty were put an end to there might be an unlimited armament on their side, and we would have to follow suit. My hon. friend will realise that the condition is such that we have to be very careful of what we do and of what we say, and I do not think my hon. friend has served as good a purpose as perhaps he had in his mind in bringing the matter to the attention of the country. It is a matter whch has been engaging our attention again and again. I may say that when we were at Washington, in 1899, at the Joint High Commission, this subject engaged the attention of the two parties. There were modifications suggested at the time, but upon the suggestion made we could not agree, and the matter was left as it was. There has been correspondence going on for some time on this matter, which, if it is of a nature to be brought down, will be brought down. But there has also been correspondence of a confidential nature, which it would be premature to bring down at this stage. All the papers that can be brought down will be brought down."

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Review asks in big type "Who is the meanest man in Peterborough?" It has no need to ask the public such a question.

A despatch to the Montreal Star states that without Mr. Oliver the Liberal leader in the British Columbia legislature, the Opposition would be a joke. The people will find, perhaps, that with a 21 million dollar railway burden the Government will be no joke.

The Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, Postmaster-General is in London, and, according to the Standard of Empire, in a playful mood, at the Vagabond's Club, thus referred to his mission in England: "I have come over here for the purpose of cheapening postage and cable communication between this country and Canada. If I find any difficulties in the way I will cancel all existing contracts and make fresh ones with English aviators for the same purpose."

MR. ACLAND'S REPORT.

(Montreal Gazette.)

The report of the Deputy Minister of Labour on industrial conditions in the coal fileds of Nova Scotian is a public document of more than ordinary lucidity. Mr. Acland's experience in the newspaper field qualified him as an observer and his training enabled him to lay the facts before the reader succinictly and yet comprehensively. He traces the union movement from its inception in the mines up to the present time, and makes it clear that it prospered and assisted in the advancement of the men until its leaders became politicians. Then it split into rival camps and the outsider was enabled to gain the foothold which until then had been denied him. If Mr. John Moffatt had kept out of politics it is likely that the present strike would never have occurred. Mr. Acland pertinently remarks that it would not be proper for him as a public servant to discuss the political aspect of the situation other than to suggest that it has had an imporant bearing in the whole difficulty. It was not Mr. Acland's mission to suggest a remedy, and it is probably just as well that it was not. A commission conducted a somewhat similar enquir in British Columbia some years ago, when the conditions existent at that time almose duplicated those now prevalent in Nova Scotia, and made certain excellent suggestions, not one of which has ever received the slightest consideration. While Mr. Acland does not suggest a remedy the natural one will suggest itself to every reader—that an incorporated Canadian union endeavouring to live up to its contract with employers is entitled to some measure of protection from the assaults of an outside irresponsible body. Incorporation of labour unions should, as the British Columbia commission recommended, be compulsory. If a foreign labour union desires to do business in Canada it should be compelled to place itself under and be responsible to Canadian laws. Mr. Acland's report is worthy of study by all who are interested in the subject.

THE REAL ISSUE IN BRITAIN.

(Montreal Herald.)

Lord Northcliffe says that the issue in the coming elections will be between an obsolete system of free trade and tariff reform, and that the House of Lords, largely composed of business men, is precipitating the struggle in order to give the country adequate protection.

If Lord Northcliffe is right, it is peculiar that the debate in the House of Lords has been so largely confined to attacks upon the budget as being confiscatory and socialistic. No doubt Lord Northcliffe would like the issue to be as he suggests it will be, but the signs are that the fight will be between those who feel that the budget represents an earnest effort, if not to equalize conditions and opportunities of life, yet to extend the solicitude of the state to the masses who most need its care and those who feel that the powers and privileges, and possessions of the rich are being threatened. The Liberals, through the budget, are making the issue, and the Lords, by rejecting the budget, are emphasizing it and its consequences as the issue.

Furthermore, to talk of the Lords as a body of business men, intent in this fight on helping the nation through a protection tariff, is to ignore not only the debate in which they have taken part, but the facts of their relationship to the state. The budget marks the beginning of a campaign for the reformation of the land system of Britain, and hence it is that the Lords are gathering at Westminister in unprecedented numbers. Their craft is in danger.

The facts are that 15,000,000 acres, or nearly half of the enclosed area of England and Wales, are held by 2,250 persons, many of them Peers, Here is a table covering eight of the English counties:

	Peers		Proprietors (including Peers).
	hold.	Acres		Acres
Northumberland	9	322,722	146	967,245
Sussex	19	195,016	59	380,360
Bucks	5	87,954	22	205,900
Herts	10	82,682	25	157,544
Wilts	16	239,708	44	465,601
Suffolk	10	132,365	46	365,448
Leicester	7	98,139	24	197,530
Notts	9	156,754	30	280,067
Total	85	1,315,353	396	3,019,815

It will be seen that in these seven counties, out of their total area of 5,752,208 acres, 85 Peers hold 1,315,353 acres, and 396 proprietors, including the Peers, own 3,019,815, or more than half of the total.

No wonder the land question is growing acute. No wonder, when the great landlord proprietors add farm to farm, and change tillable ground to grazing meadows to the extent of 2,000,000 acres in twenty years, that intensive cultivation disappears and with it the country population. No wonder that a budget which undertakes to deal with this stupendous wrong to the nation at large arouses the Lords. In their alarm they have precipitated a struggle that can end in only one way—such a modification of the conditions of land-holding as will bring the people back to the soil. The most depressing sight in England is its idle acres. The struggle now beginning cannot cease until it be made possible for the slum-hived people of the cities to spread upon the land now sacred to the cattle and the foxes.

NEW SCHOOL INSPECTORATE

Lindsay with a total of 59 schools making a grand total of 91 schools in the new inspectorate. Mr. Lees would have the remaining 96 schools in Peterborough county. Dr. Merchant pointed out that there were too many schools in the county for one inspector and the union was therefore necessary. In Lennox and Addington and in other counties a similar organization had been effected. Dr. Merchant stated that the arrangement he had mentioned was his suggestion. It was for the two counties, Peterborough and Victoria to determine upon the new inspectorate. With practically any arrangement that could be named, objections could be found. In this case the principal one is that of Smith which is at Peterborough's door is placed in the new inspector's district. This is not as serious as it appears, he said. There are two main reasons for calling upon the inspector, one for advice to trustees in selecting teachers, the other for advice to teachers in regard to methods of work. In the former connection it is the fault of the school boards if they have not good teachers. The Normal School is close at hand, and Mr. Walker would only be too glad to give trustees information regarding teachers.

Question of Cost.

The Government pays one-half of the inspector's salary. The department desires to save the salary of one inspector. The minimum salary is $1,500, of which $750 is paid by the Government. Peterborough County would have to pay $270, and Victoria County the balance, $480, of the salary of the new inspector.

Dr. Merchant suggested that a nominating committee, composed of the reeves of the municipalities effected should be formed, to discuss the question. It was not a matter of gain or loss. Each county stands to gain. A good inspector for Peterborough township would be a good inspector for Victoria township. Both should focus their attention upon the appointment of the best man available. "The man you appoint will go out of office at the end of the year unless the appointment is confirmed by the Department during the year. What we want is not Peterborough pitted against Victoria; not Peterborough judgment against Victoria judgment. It is not a question of dividing as county to county. The first question the Council should ask is: "Are we favourable to a union for inspection purposes with Victoria?

Secondly, how are we going to carry this out?

The only feasible way is by appointing a committee. After deciding upon this the only thing left is the action of the joint committee of the two counties. There are no uestions that can arise. The salary division depends upon the schools from each county.

In concluding, Dr. Merchant stated that the real aim of the department, the reason of its existence, the appointment of inspectors, etc., was the education of the child. This should be remembered in any step taken in regard to education. The teacher stands next to the parent.

To Reeve Moher of Douro, the speaker stated that an inspector is appointed by the County Council, and if at the end of the year his appointment has been confirmed, he retains his position until he resigns or until the Department declares it vacant.

Dr. Merchant paid a tribute to Inspectors Knight and J. Coyle Brown, who had resigned. To them and to the men like them who organized the school work the country owes a great deal, he said. "They have done a great deal more than we dream of. Mr. Brown has been connected with too highly appreciate the unsparing our school for very many years, and we cannot too highly appreciate the unsparing work done in those days.

To Councillor Knox of Havlock, Dr. Merchant stated that the arrangement he had stated was the best he could arrive at. He had thought of uniting Peterborough and Hastings counties, but there were many disadvantages to that scheme.

Referred to Committee.

On motion of Reeve Shaw, of Harvey, and Reeve Hales, of Chandos, the matter was referred to the Committee of the Whole Council. Warden Scott expressed his pleasure upon the opportunity of welcoming the deputation from the neighbouring county, and said he hoped the Council would find time to show them the city's most interesting features and industries. The reeve of Omemee stated that the deputation wanted to get the work through. Warden Jordan in a very gracious reply, thanked Reeve Scott and the Council of Peterborough County, and said it would be a pleasure to enjoy the hospitality extended. The Council immediately went into committee to take up the inspectorate question in all its details.

EXTRA ON THE GAME

The Examiner Will Issue a Late Edition To-morrow Giving the Full Particulars of the Canadian Rugby Final.

ALL THE FEATURES

Much interest is being taken in Peterborough in the Parkdale-Varsity game to-morrow for the championship of the Canadian Rugby Union, on account of the fact that the members of the Parkdale team are well known to many local people and they will naturally want to hear the details of the game. Realizing that such is the case the Examiner has made arrangements for a complete report of the game, such as was given last week of the Ottawa-Varsity contest. The same man who handled the story for this paper last week will be in charge again to-morrow, so that readers of the Examiner may count upon a comprehensive report, in which none of the features of the play will be overlooked. As much as possible of the play will be run in the regular edition, and at the conclusion of the game a second edition will be published, giving the whole story. This will be on the street at 5.30 o'clock, and will tell you all you want to know about the game.

In addition bulletins will be given of the R. M. C.-Dundas game for the Intermediate Canadian championship interested, because of the fact that two in which many Peterborough people local boys are playing, Ross Craig being captain of the Dundas team while Gordon Campbell, son of Mr. Peter Campbell, of the Bank of Toronto, is quarter back for the soldiers.

FRISCO TO HAVE FIGHT

Rickard and Gleason's Offer of $101,000 and Two-thirds of the Picture Rights Accepted by Managers.

ON FOURTH OF JULY NEXT

New York, Dec. 2. — The fight for the heavyweight championship of the world between James J. Jeffries and John Johnson will be held in California, in the vicinity of San Francisco, July 4, 1910, and will be staged by Tex Rickard, of Nevada, and John J. Gleason of San Francisco. Their bid of $101,000 and two-thirds of the moving picture privileges to the contestants was formally accepted during a stormy meeting at Hoboken, N.J., to-day. The final articles of agreement will be drawn up and signed here to-morrow. This is the largest purse ever offered for a prize fight.

Thos. J. McCarey of Los Angeles, whose bid many persons considered highest, made a game struggle for his Pacific athletic club, but his cause was without hope. James Coffroth, by virtue of his control of the two basic patents on moving pictures ,had decreed against McCarey and his ally, Eddie Graney, of San Francisco, and the fight was given to Gleason and Rickard, who, it is conceded by sporting men, have an understanding with Coffroth—a surmise strengthened by the fact that Gleason and Coffroth have shared one bid in the past. McCarey and Graney estimated that the net value of the moving pictures will amount to at least $200,000, and may be worth $400,000. Rickard and Gleason declined to estimate.

When the meeting was called to order in a hotel in Hoboken to-day Sam Berger, Jeffries' manager, announced that his principal had decided for Rickard and Gleason and Geo. Little, representing Johnson, made a similar announcement. Stakeholder Bob Murphy was about to declare the matter settled when McCarey rose to insist on reading the Rickard bid, in an effort to show that it was not the best.

"I was induced to come across the continent," protested McCarey, "by the representation that everything was to be above board here. I find it otherwise. If my bid is not the best, then Eddie Graney's is. Graney's bid amounts, including pictures, to $375,000 to the fighters."

Here followed some bitter words between Gleason and McCarey, but finally order was restored and the stakeholder declared the award in favour of Rickard and Gleason.

General sympathy was expressed for McCarey, who had prejudiced his rather delicate health by a cross-continent trip in the expectation of getting the fight.

While the guarantee purse is the largest ever offered for a battle, sporting men believe the moving pictures will net even more. An indication of their value is to be seen in the fact that Lou Houseman, who secured from the late Dan Stuart for $104,000, the Illinois rights to the Corbett-Fitzimmons pictures, still realizes handsomely on his investment.

John L. Sullivan was mentioned in the gossip to-day as a possible referee, but was not seen at headquarters.

No one believes, however, that Sullivan will be selected as referee, as his age and bulk are considered handicaps. The referee may be chosen to-morrow, but it is likely Jeffries, Johnson and the promoters will take time and thought before selecting so important an officer.

When Jack Johnson heard to-day that Jeffries had twice dreamed that he had knocked Johnson out in the fourth round, he said: "That Mistah Jeffries sure is a bear cat on dreams. He better turn over on the other side."

The laws of California permit finish fights, but contests within the city limits are regulated by the municipal authorities that only twenty-round exhibitions can be given.

There is a belief, however, that pressure may be brought to bear by the Rickard-Gleason combination on the incoming administration, so that it will be possible to hold an unlimited contest in San Francisco proper. In such an event the baseball park probably will be the scene of the battle. The grounds are controlled by Gleason.

On the other hand, there is an undercurrent of opinion that the fight will be pluled off at Coffroth's arena at Colma. Here unlimited contests are permitted without legal molestation, but the arena would have to be enlarged.

AN ALL-STAR RUGBY TEAM

Various Canadian Papers Pick Out What They Consider the Strongest Fourteen Players in the Game.

DIFFERENT OPINIONS

The Ottawa Journal has selected an all-Star Canadian football team, which, of course, has been subject to a good deal of criticism. It is as follows:

Full back—Stinson, Montreal.
Centre half—Williams, Ottawa.
Right half—Gall, Varsity.
Quarter—Foulds, Varsity.
Scrimmage—Kennedy, Ottawa.
Scrimmage—Ritchie, Varsity.
Scrimmage—Bramer, Hamilton.
Inside wing—Barron, Hamilton.
Inside wingMGilmour, Hamilton.
Middle wing—Smith, Ottawa College.
Middle wing—Wigle, Hamilton.
Outside wing—Stronach, Ottawa.
Outside wing—Elliott, Queen's.

The Journal says: The players were selected without regard for the team with which they played. The result allows the following total: Varsity 4 players; Ottawas, 3 players; Hamilton, three players; Montreal, McGill, Queen's and Ottawa College, each one player. The picked team is thus thoroughly representative. Varsity, the Canadian champions, are represented by the greater number of players, and Ottawas and Hamilton are each well represented. The Inter-Collegiate and Inter-Provincial unions are equally represented, each having seven players.

The Hamilton Herald says: There are few Hamiltonians who will agree with the selection. In the first place no all star team could be complete without Ben Simpson being on it, and it is doubtful if Tommy Stinson is George Smith's equal as a full-back. Foulds of Varsity is a good passing quarter back, but for an all-round player he has little on Coryell of the Argonauts. Stronach and Elliott are entitled to be selected as the outside wings on this season's showing, but how about Isbister as a middle wing? In the early part of the season Bob had not struck his gait, but his work in the last three games certainly earned him the right to figure as one of Canada's great middle wings. Of course, every critic can see the best talent in his own city, but a look at the Journal selection shows that it is too much Ottawa.

The Toronto World says that if Coach Clancy, until Saturday supposed to be the best in the business, were asked his choice of half back, he'd likely name Johnny Newton, and Harry Griffith would probably say the same. Ben Simpson is also worthy of consideration. The public choice, of course, is Lawson, and there's no mistake in Gall. The game put up by Williams against Tigers in the play off stamped him about the best.

Then the Hamilton Spectator objects for these reasons: "To our mind Tommy Stinson would have to go some to beat out George Smith, of the Tigers, for that full-back position. Then we have a thought or two that Ben Simpson is entitled to a place on the back division, while there is absolutely no room on the team for big George Kennedy. The Ottawa player could never qualify any more for an all-star aggregation, and we would rather see Jimmy Bell, of Varsity, or Banty Russell, of the Argos, in Kennnedy's place. Then it would be well to replace Wally Barron with Bob Isbister. We agree that Lawson, Foulds, Wigle, Stronach and Elliott are entitled to their places without any opposition."

The Toronto Star thinks that the Journal expert did his work well, but will undertake to pick another team that will make his all-star team go the limit to win, even if the selection is but a second choice. The team:

Full back—Smith, Hamilton.
Centre half—Newton, Varsity.
Right half—McCrimmon, T.A.A.C.
Quarter—Dissette, Parkdale.
Scrimmage—Craig, Hamilton.
Scrimmage, Russell, Argonauts.
Scrimmage—Bell, Varsity.
Inside wing—Grey, Hamilton.
Inside wing—Church, Ottawa.
Middle wing—Hume, Varsity.
Middle wing—Isbister, Hamilton.
Outside wing—Norcoss, Argonauts.
Outside wing—Thompson, Varsity.

What a punting duel between Williams, Gall, and Stinson on the one side and McCrimmon, Simpson, and Smith on the other.

Say, wouldn't that be a game if the teams selected could get together, says the Toronto Star.

QUEER BETS ON PARKDALE GAME

Toronto Fans are Speculating Upon the Result of To-morrow's Battle.

Toronto Star: All sorts of wagers are being made upon the outcome of the Varsity-Parkdale senior rugby championship game and a fine crop of disputes is almost sure to result.

On the game itself a few wagers are being made at 1 to 4 with Varsity, of course, the odds-on choice. The majority of the wagering, however, is with a handicap.

1. Three to two that Varsity will double Parkdale's score.
2. Even money that Parkdale will make as good a showing as Ottawa.
3. Even money that Parkdale will not be beaten by 24 points.
4. Even money that Varsity's line will not be crossed.
5. Even money that Varsity will get a touchdown in every quarter.

What a fine time the various sporting editors will have deciding disputes if the score is 5-0 or 10-3, or something like that. On what basis will bet No. 2 be decided? It looks as if the sporting editors will need the able assistance of a mathematician next week.

It is a cinch that while 5-0 or 10-2 is mathematically a poorer score than 31-7, yet if Parkdale can hold the great Varsity team to 5-0 or 10-2, it will be proclaimed that the Paddlers made a better showing than King Clancy's proteges.

And if—

But, pshaw! Parkdale may win and settle the whole business off-hand.

JUNIOR TEAM FOR LINDSAY

Scugog Town Will be Represented in the Junior Series of the O.H.A.

There'll be hockey in Lindsay this winter alright. Despite talk to the contrary some sports are backing a club which will place a junior team in the O.H.A. A little informal meeting was held last night in a local hotel, and the conclave lasted for considerable time. The upshot was that a decision to enter a team was reached. This team will be composed of the rising generation of hockey players and great things are expected of the boys in future years if not in A.D. 1910.—Lindsay Warder.

PARKDALE'S CHANCES

Paddlers Should Make as Good Showing as Ottawa Against the Students.

The Parkdale-Varsity game to-morrow is attracting a great deal of interest, not because there seems any doubt as to the result, but rather on account of the uncertainty of just what kind of a showing the Paddlers will be able to make against the great student team. The general verdict seems to be that the Canoe men will be badly beaten, but on form they should make a better showing than Ottawa. The O.R.F.U. champions have the advantage of having played together for three years, during which period they have been defeated but once, by T.A.A.C. in the middle of the present season. This long record of victories should inspire the necessary confidence, while playing together so long the Paddlers have worked up considerable team play, and as they use a number of Varsity's best ground gaining plays, notably the onside kick and the long passing game which so badly fooled the Ottawas, they should be able in some measure to stop these tactics if the students resort to them to-morrow. Individually the Paddlers make a good showing. It is true that they have no Smirle Lawson to go plunging through their opponents' line, but they have a well balanced steady back division and a strong fast wing line. Killally, their centre half, who is being brought over from the States for the game, is a splendid punter and a good all-round man and the same is true of Brady at full back. The ex-Dundas man was the star of the Inter-Provincial intermediate series last year. Cromar on the half line is fast but uncertain, while Moore the other half is only a youngster, but has speed and a good pair of hands, Dissette at quarter back needs to back up from nobody playing the position to-day. His passing is clean and accurate and he tackles beautifully. On the wing line Brockbank, Meighen and Barber should be especially prominent to-morrow. Barber the Y.M.C.A. all round athlete, has a world of speed and if the Varsity wings let him get away from any of the end runs in which Parkdale work him constantly, he is bound to gain ground as he runs like a deer. He and the other two wings named are always on the ball and tackle low and hard.

Of course, Parkdale may blow up and be beaten by an enormous score, but those who have seen the Canoeists in action expect them to make a very creditable showing against Harry Griffith's machine, the members of which are not likely to be on edge as they were in the Ottawa game. Of course if the Paddlers could devise some means of stopping Lawson, their chances of keeping down the score would be considerably enhanced and perhaps the tackling of Meighen, Brockbank and company may help some in that respect.

LOCAL TEAM WON GAME

THE SCORE WAS 3 TO 2

The Brock Street Roller Rink Hockey team turned the tables on the Lindsay team in the roller hockey game, played at Brock Street Rink last night, the homesters winning an exciting struggle by three goals to two. The play was close and hard all the way, and the big crowd of spectators found the game surprisingly interesting. All the players wore regulation uniforms, and played with ordinary hockey sticks. It looked almost like an ice hockey game at times, although the ball that is used instead of a puck is difficult to handle and the players have frequent trouble owing to skates coming off. There was plenty of good individual work and the game was well worth seeing.

The first half was very close. Neither team scored until nearly the middle of the period, when Lindsay scored first blood on a long shot from the centre. Peterborough evend things up just before half time on a good shot by Smith from quarter way. In the second half Peterborough started out with a score in the first few minutes, Smith again doing the trick, and followed up the feat soon after by another goal, after a nice rush. Lindsay scored the last goal on a rush by Parrington and from then on until the end of the game there was little to choose between the two teams on the play.

The Peterborough team was faster and had an effective combination, but the Lindsay defence was strong and held them out in good style, Primeau in goal getting in the way of numerous shots. The stars for Peterborough were Kenneally and Smith, both of whom did some stellar work. Jacy Seymour refereed the game satisfactorily. The teams were as follows:

Peterborough — Goal, Clute; point, Godfrey; cover, White; forwards, Smith, Thompson, Kenneally, Halpany.

FRIENDS LEARNED HIS WIFE'S BLOOD TAINT

Cousin of Prince von Buelow no Longer Wished to Live When the Secret Was Discovered.

New Orleans, Dec. 3.—There no longer seems a doubt that Edward W. von Buelow, a cousin of the former Chancellor of Germany, has made way with himself. The act, following upon his financial ruin and the breaking up of a happy home he had maintained here for fourteen years has brought to light a most pathetic and dramatic story.

His fortune was deliberately wrecked, it appears, and his most sacred secret—that his wife was an octoroon—was deliberately revealed to the public by enemies he made in cotton speculation.

More than that, he was arrested under the law prohibiting the marriage of whites with persons having a slight trace of negro blood. And so, penniless, heart-broken, and facing a trial, he vanished and, it is generally believed, killed himself.

"No one will ever see my husband again. He is dead," said Mrs. von Buelow, a beautiful woman, as light in complexion as most of the South, and, she says, the daughter of a judge who bore an honoured name in Louisiana. Her two children are flaxen-haired and blue-eyed, little German-Americans.

HALL'S GREAT FIRE SALE

CONTINUES TO CROWD THE STORE

This greatest of all sacrifice events has excited shopping interest to highest pitch, and each day's selling breaks the record of the day preceeding. This speaks well for the bargains that are offered. No sale which was not genuine and backed by the most extraordinary values could sustain buying interest as this Fire Sale has done and show a constant increase in attendance and selling.

Plenty of Bargains Left--Hundreds and Hundreds of Them

We want to clear out every bit of our present smoke-damaged stocks, and there's enough still on hand to make thousands of thrifty people happy before the Sale ends.

But we repeat the warning that the finest bargains are going fastest and that varieties in many lines are rapidly diminishing. Therefore, the best time to buy is now. Everyone is in need of some of the things we are offering during this Sale—things which will cost you elsewhere a QUARTER, a THIRD and in many instances a FULL HALF more than our present prices. Don't delay another day.

LOCAL TEAM WON GAME

THE SCORE WAS 3 TO 2

The Brock Street Roller-Rink Hockey team turned the tables on the Lindsay team in the roller hockey game, played at Brock Street Rink last night, the homesters winning an exciting struggle by three goals to two. The play was close and hard all the way, and the big crowd of spectators found the game surprisingly interesting. All the players wore regulation uniforms, and played with ordinary hockey sticks. It looked almost like an ice hockey game at times, although the ball that is used instead of a puck is difficult to handle and the players have frequent trouble owing to skates coming off. There was plenty of good individual work and the game was well worth seeing.

The first half was very close. Neither team scored until nearly the middle of the period, when Lindsay scored first blood on a long shot from the centre. Peterborough evend things up just before half time on a good shot by Smith from quarter way. In the second half Peterborough started out with a score in the first few minutes, Smith again doing the trick, and followed up the feat soon after by another goal, after a nice rush. Lindsay scored the last goal on a rush by Parrington and from then on until the end of the game there was little to choose between the two teams on the play.

The Peterborough team was faster and had an effective combination, but the Lindsay defence was strong and held them out in good style, Primeau in goal getting in the way of numerous shots. The stars for Peterborough were Kenneally and Smith, both of whom did some stellar work. Jacy Seymour refereed the game satisfactorily. The teams were as follows:

Peterborough — Goal, Clute; point, Godfrey; cover, White; forwards, Smith, Thompson, Kenneally, Halpany.

MR. JAS. THOMPSON SELLS HIS BUSINESS

Mr. Browning of Peterborough, One of the Gentlemen of Partnership That Has Purchased It.

Mr. Jas Thompson, M.P.P., has sold his big dry goods and clothing business, and leased the building for five years, to Messrs. G. R. Browning of Peterborough, and A. O. Sawyer, of Lindsay, two gentlemen of large mercantile experience and sound business ability. Mr. Browning has been on the staff of the Robt. Fair Co., Peterborough, for years, and Mr. Sawyer was formerly employed for a long time with Sutcliffe & Sons, of the electric city. They will take possession on Feb. 1st, next.—Havelock Standard.

FRIENDS LEARNED HIS WIFE'S BLOOD TAINT

Cousin of Prince von Buelow no Longer Wished to Live When the Secret Was Discovered.

New Orleans, Dec. 3.—There no longer seems a doubt that Edward W. von Buelow, a cousin of the former Chancellor of Germany, has made way with himself. The act, following upon his financial ruin and the breaking up of a happy home he had maintained here for fourteen years has brought to light a most pathetic and dramatic story.

His fortune was deliberately wrecked, it appears, and his most sacred secret—that his wife was an octoroon—was deliberately revealed to the public by enemies he made in cotton speculation.

More than that, he was arrested under the law prohibiting the marriage of whites with persons having a slight trace of negro blood. And so, penniless, heart-broken, and facing a trial, he vanished and, it is generally believed, killed himself.

"No one will ever see my husband again. He is dead," said Mrs. von Buelow, a beautiful woman, as light in complexion as most of the South, and, she says, the daughter of a judge who bore an honoured name in Louisiana. Her two children are flaxen-haired and blue-eyed, little German-Americans.

PERTH TEMPERANCE LECTURE REPORT

The following report of a temperance meeting has been handed to us for insertion, and is copied from the Perth Expositor of November 17th, last:

"On Thursday evening of last week Knox Church was fairly well crowded to hear Rev. Sam. W. Small speak on temperance. The speaker from Georgia was heralded here as "the silver tongued orator of the South," and many wanted to hear him. Col. Balderson, who is the president of the Social and Moral Reform Council of Perth, occupied the chair, and in a few brief references to the meeting called upon Mr. Small for his address. For more than an hour Mr. Small spoke, during which time he made many lucid explanations of tangled arguments against the adoption of a local option or total prohibition measure. He had a way of speaking which, when he used the King's English and spoke temperance, and got away from his slangy utterances, proved a treat. The effect of the many strong points made from the standpoint of the subject under discussion was lost by such references as these: He spoke of the men who upheld the liquor traffic as "Those red-nosed, flannel-mouthed, bull-necked, devils down town," and their arguments as "hog-wash," and slangy as was the language he used here it was evidently much worse in some places judging from an extract which appeared in the Kemptville Advance last week. The Advance says that Mr. Small when "advising voters who cash in their consciences for the sake of a few hundred dollars revenue from the trade, to get all the good they can out of that money here and now, he said: 'All the good you ever got out of the traffic won't buy you two ounces of ice in hell.' The churches and temperance go hand in hand, and such language as was used in Knox church does not do the church, the clergy, or temperance any great credit. The style was thoroughly disapproved of by the great majority of those present, some of the speaker's utterances only calling forth smiles from the young boys present while the older heads in many cases were hung in shame. The style may be typically American, bpt just the same it was vulgar, and should not be countenanced on a public Canadian platform not to speak of a church pulpit."

HAVELOCK WILL HAVE POOL ROOM

License Granted Mr. Chas. E. Armstrong Although Council Was Previously Opposed.

Havelock Council settled a momentous question at a special meeting held a few nights ago when a license was granted Mr. Chas. Armstrong to conduct a pool and billiard room. The Village Council had, during the past year, opposed the opening of such a place of amusement, and their reversed decision is explained by the Standard, as follows:

"It all came about in this way: Mr. Armstrong installed a pool table some time ago. He also applied for a license. Confronted with the fact that he would run the table if no license was granted and the town would receive no revenue whatever from that source, the question was asked the clerk, 'what steps could the council take to compel Mr. Armstrong to pay a license?' To the astonishment of everyone the clerk informed the Council that the Pool and Bagatelle By-law, passed years ago, had never been repealed, and was still in force, and that they would have to grant a license if requested to do so, whereupon on motion of Young and Phillips, Mr. Armstrong's application was accepted. The fees in the by-law were fixed at $50 for the first table and $30 for each additional table, age limit 18 years, and hours from 7 a.m. to 10.30 p.m. This was amended on motion of Young and Phillips, fixing additional tables at $15.

Of course, this acknowledgment to public sentiment on the part of the Council, is to be commended. They could have repealed the by-law and so adhered to their convictions against granting such a license, expressed by them in council on several occasions when a license was asked for, but they rightly, we think, apparently finally made up their minds not to insist on forcing their private opinions on the citizens who differ with them."

VARSITY TEAM TO SEE "BILLY"

The champion Varsity Rugby team will be the guests of Edgar Atchison Ely at the opening performance of "Billy" at the Royal Alexandra Monday night. The invitation was extended by Mr. Ely in honour of the Varsity's recent victory over the Ottawa Rough Riders.

"Billy" is a football play, and Mr. Ely is an old football player, and since leaving college some years ago he has been a strong football advocate and enthusiast of the game. It is because of this that Mr. Ely was interested in the victory of the Toronto team, and that he was led to extend this invitation. Captain Newton of the Varsity team very cordially accepted the invitaton on behalf of his players and the entire squad will occupy the box seats when "Billy" opens his engagement in this city on Monday night.

BASKETBALL

Last night the second game of the Junior Basketball League was played off, and a large audience was present.

The Whites played the Greens, the first half of the game the Greens having things pretty much there own way, Morrow shooting baskets from all angles of the floor. The first half ended 7 to 3 in favour of the Greens.

In the second half Smith (Captain) changed his team around ,and put R. Laing to hang on to Morrow, and the change made it very interesting for Laing stayed with Morrow throughout the game. Laing did some shooting that would make the big fellows sit up and notice, much to the surprise of the audience. The bell rang and the game ended 10-7, in favour of the Whites.

Officials—Referee H. A. McLaughlin, umpire, Bruce Lees, timekeeper and scorer, R. Howden.

Tonight the Blues and Greens will clash and Smith (captain), says that he will make a better showing tonight than he did at the last game with the Whites.

The line-up last night was as follows:

Whites		Grens
H. Smith	R.F.	Phelan
R. Laing	L.F.	H. Morrow
W. Thornton	C	Brown
D. Mulhern	R.G.	Harper
H. Hill	L.G.	Elliott

Time—15 minute halves.

HOCKEY

The Ottawa Hockey Club at a special meeting decided to insist on a double schedule for the new Canadian Hockey League at Saturday's meeting at Montreal.

The Ottawas are hot on the trail of Bruce Ridpath, whom they want for right wing. Ridpath asked $1,600 for his services, and the Ottawas are considering his case. They are also after Jack Fraser of Portage la Prairie, and Lester Patrick.

Renfrew made a big effort to corral Kerr, Lake, Stuart and Walsh, of the Ottawas. The Ottawas got there first, however, and claimed to have bagged Renfrew's big coup.

W. P. McDougall, president of the Shamrocks, gave emphatic denial to his club having sought Lahman, the Berlin goal keeper. "We have not even asked a man outside of Winnipeg to play with us," is what he says. "The team which will go after the Stanley Cup are Winnipeg men."

Representatives of the various teams in the Ontario Professional Hockey League will meet at Galt on Friday for the purpose of adopting a schedule for the season.

Percy Lesueur, who has returned to Ottawa from Cobalt, predicts a big season for hockey in the silver country, the teams having already started to book players, Haileybury having secured Horace Gaul, Harry Smith, Billy Nicholson, Billy Baird, and Oren Flood.

BANKING REFORMS

A Hundred and Fifty Survivors of the Fenian Raid Ask the Premier to Give Them Lands in the West For Their Services—Sir Wilfrid Says He Will Do What He Can—Mr. Magrath on Postoffices.

Ottawa, Dec. 4.—Veterans of the Fenian Raid, represented by a deputation of about 150, yesterday requested the Federal Government for land grants in recognition of their services, rendered in 1866.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Sir Frederick Borden, Hon. Sydney Fisher, and Hon. L. P. Brodeur were present in the railway committee room of the Commons when the veterans, headed by Sir Mackenzie Bowell and supported by a Highland piper, entered. Some of the veterans had drawn swords in their hands. The deputation was introduced by M. Martin, M.P., of Montreal.

Abbott Johnston of L'Original, promised on behalf of the veterans that if given grants of land they were prepared to work the land themselves or their sons would. They had fought for their country, and they were prepared to fight again.

Capt. Paterson of Montreal deprecated the efforts which had been made to turn this into a political question. They were grateful for the medals they had received, but as many of them were poor, he thought that a pension would be better than a land grant. It was not in the power of many of them to locate. He denied that they were charlatans, mendicants, or paupers—they were the men of the country.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier said that in 1870 he had the honor of wearing the Queen's uniform. He expressed the belief that if the veterans had taken up the matter some years ago there would have been little difficulty about their request.

He sympathized deeply with the movement, but could have wished that the veterans had been uniform in their demands. If anything is done, however, it should be done soon. He thought there would be some difficulty in deciding just who would be entitled to reward.

Sir Wilfrid said, in conclusion, that the matter was seriously engaging the attention of the Government, and if it was possible to decide that the request could be granted, nothing would please him better.

In the House yesterday Mr. Defers introduced a bill to amend the Banking Act.

It provides that more publicity be given when banks make a large bonus; that 15 shareholders, representing one-twentieth of the capital of a bank, may summons a meeting, instead of 25 shareholders, representing one-tenth of the capital as is now the case

It also aims to protect shareholders from bad faith on the part of the directors, and provides for the inspection of banks by the Department of Finance.

Hon. Mr. Foster asked when the amendment of the Banking Act would be introduced. Mr. Fielding said that it would be some little time. Owing to matters affecting the Department which would be dealt with, the amendments would probably not be introduced until after the recess.

Mr. Foster: "What about the budget?"

Mr. Fielding said he had hoped to make his budget address before the holidays, but he would not be able to definitely inform the House as to when it would be delivered until early next week.

When the House was in supply on public buildings' estimates and "new postoffices" were under consideration, Mr. Magrath of Lethbridge, Alta., attacked the Minister of Public Works for what he described as his lack of policy. He condemned his actions in placing public buildings in towns and villages without a request for such from the departments concerned. He instanced postoffices, and said that all the Minister could show in many cases, such as a $25,000 building for the Village of Maneville, Que., with a population of 1,300, were the requests of the member for the constituency or a board of trade. The request should have come from the department itself.

He described it as humiliating to be compelled to advance the claims of Lethbridge, which was in dire need of a postoffice, and though a request had been sent by the Postoffice Department to the Minister of Public Works, it had been disregarded.

Before his election "political snipes" had gone through the constituency telling the people that if they elected Magrath they would get no postoffice. Yet, said Mr. Magrath, the Minister claimed there was no politics in public works.

Mr. Pugsley in reply said that Lethbridge had only recently taken on its very rapid growth. However, he would consider carefully the claims of Lethbridge.

The public accounts committee entered upon its work for the session yesterday under the chairmanship of Col. Warburton.

Mr. Blain asked for the production of seven accounts in connection with the Quebec Tercentenary, one amounting to $39,328, paid to J. H. Gignac, Ltd., Quebec, for the construction of grand stands, etc., and supply of materials for scenery. Another of $4,344, paid to the Cambridge Corporation, Ltd., Montreal, for printing souvenirs and programs; and a third, amounting to $7,293, paid to L. O. Armstrong, Montreal, for supplying and equipping one hundred Indians.

WHITNEY AND GOUIN.

They Will Be Host and Guest at Big Dinner In Toronto.

Toronto, Dec. 4.—Sir James Whitney and his colleagues in the Cabinet will entertain Sir Lomer Gouin, Prime Minister of Quebec, together with one of his Ministers and a member of the Quebec Legislature, at luncheon in the Parliament Buildings, on Dec. 15, at 1 o'clock.

In this way the Government desires to express its appreciation of the hospitality and courtesy extended to Sir James Whitney by the Quebec Government on the occasion of the celebration of the tercentenary of the founding of the City of Quebec and the nationalization of the battlefields of Quebec.

All the members of the Legislature, representatives of the Senate, the House of Commons, the judiciary, the Canadian Club and the press will be invited to be present at the luncheon.

On the evening of the same day Sir Lomer Gouin will be entertained at an informal dinner by the Canadian Club, and the distinguished visitor will return to Quebec the same evening.

While the reason officially assigned as furnishing the occasion of this fraternising of the Premiers is a purely social one, it is understood that grave questions of state affecting the relationships of the provinces will be discussed privately during the meeting.

It must not be forgotten in this connection that at the close of the last interprovincial conference, Sir James Whitney and Sir Lomer Gouin was appointed a committee to determine the time, place and subject for the next meeting of the conference. The question of provincial rights is in the air at present. The inference seems to be obvious.

Again, the Provinces of Quebec is generally credited with having ambitions in the line of a power policy. Hon. Adam Beck will be within handy calling distance on Dec. 15, and Ontario is the chief depot for information of this nature.

Zelaya Will Ignore Ultimatum.

Washington, Dec. 3.—President Zelaya has not only refused to take official cognizance of United States Secretary of State Knox's note, which was practically an ultimatum, but he is declared to have despatched special agents to Washington to endeavor to have the State Department's ultimatum set aside, first by appeals to that Department, and secondly, by direct appeal of members of Congress.

U. S. Money Circulation.

Washington, Dec. 4.—Every person in the United States should have a stake of $34.98 if the money in circulation on Dec. 1, were evenly divided. This is based on the treasury's estimate that the population is 89,524,000

REGRETTED BY THE KING

In Speech From Throne at the Prorogation of the British Houses His Majesty Says Crisis in Southeastern Europe Has Passed — King Congratulates Defence Conference on Its Work.

London, Dec. 4.—The King's speech proroguing Parliament was read yesterday. The proceedings were brief and the attendance small. In fact the private members of the chamber were almost outnumbered by the Ministers in attendance.

Both Houses met at 2 o'clock, when the black rod proceeded immediately to the Lower House to request the attendance of the Commoners at the Upper House to hear the royal speech.

The speech was read by Lord High Chancellor Loreburn, who was supported by Viscount Althorp, the lord chamberlain; Lord MacDonnell, Lord Pentland, secretary for Scotland, and Lord Haversham.

As soon as the speech had been read, the King's consent to the bills passed during the session was announced, and the members dispersed.

The only reference to the political crisis in the speech of prorogation was in the clause addressed to the House of Commons, in which the King thanked the members for the adoption of the provision for the national expenditures. This concluded: "I regret that the provision has proved unavailing."

Beyond this, the speech made the usual references to the visits of foreign sovereigns, the friendly relations with foreign powers and the legislation passed during the session. On the matter of foreign relations the speech continued:

"The difficulties which unfortunately arose in Southeastern Europe in the autumn a year ago, have resulted happily in a practical solution for the maintenance of peace, while the constitutional regime in Turkey continues to make satisfactory progress.

"Subject to certain reservations made by my plenipotentiaries at the time of signature I have to ratify the conventions which resulted from the conference held at The Hague in 1907. Agreements with Germany, Sweden, Norway, Switzerland and Portugal, have been renewed for a further term of five years, and other agreements about to expire are in process of renewal.

"The important conference which met in July last for the exchange of views between my Government and the Governments of the self-governing dominions beyond the seas upon the subject of naval and military defence has been of great mutual advantage, and as the outcome of the deliberations it may confidently be expected that the stability of my dominions will be preserved and their unity promoted."

Polling for the elections will begin Jan. 13 and continue until Jan. 24.

The election campaign already is in full swing and many speeches were delivered last night in all parts of the country.

Lord Lansdowne at Plymouth defined the issues as tariff reform versus the extinct budget, and the two Houses of Parliament versus a single chamber. He pointed to the danger of the disestablishment of home rule and of the single chamber policy on the resident Liberals.

Winston Spencer Churchill, president of the Board of Trade, spoke at Preston and challenged the Unionists to show any benefit that could come to the cotton trade from their fiscal policy. He reminded his auditors that "every leader of the Conservative party, from the great William Pitt to the small Arthur J. Balfour—all leaders from the sublime to the ridiculous, were agreed that the House of Commons had control of finances."

David Lloyd-George Chancellor of the Exchequer, whose budget was the initial cause of the crisis, was given the opportunity of firing the first shot in the struggle as the guest at luncheon of the National Liberal Club. The function was one of the most elaborate ever held in this city.

He expressed confidence that although the budget had been buried it was assured the certain hope of an early resurrection. Attempts would be made, he said, to divert the minds of the people to irrelevant questions, but the one great and dominant question was that of the House of Lords, and this would absorb all others.

It was time for the Lords to be handled firmly, and for one he would not remain a member of the Liberal Cabinet for an hour unless he knew that the Cabinet had power to carry its bills.

B. C.'s New Governor.

Ottawa, Dec. 4.—Thos. W. Patterson has been appointed Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia, in succession to Hon. James Dunsmuir, whose resignation was accepted yesterday.

Mr. Patterson is a wealthy retired railway contractor of Victoria, B.C.

He is a native of Bruce County, Ont., and went west about twenty-five years ago.

His wife is a daughter of Senator Riley of Victoria.

Millers' Association Wants Charter.

Ottawa, Dec. 4.—The Dominion Millers' Association gives notice that it will apply to Parliament for amendments to its charter, which will enable it among other things.

To authorize the association to carry on other business that may seem convenient in connection with its present business, and

To issue capital stock to the amount of $100,000, in shares of $50 each.

Gods of Joy

In the Comfort of Philip's Strength Jackie Rested Content.

By TEMPLE BAILEY.

Copyright, 1909, by Associated Literary Press.

Out through the Dorringtons' Japanese garden fled the Little White Lady. There were lotus lilies on the pond, and two great gray lanterned posts, green lighted, guarded the gates. Then came the white driveway and the stretch of dark pines, and in the pines the Little White Lady paused.

"There!" she whispered and laughed deliciously, "He'll never find me."

But he did find her, looming like a great ghost in his white linen suit.

"You can't get away from me," he chanted.

The Little White Lady sat down on a log. "If you follow young women into a dark stretch of woods you should bring a chaperon with you," she reproved him.

"Mrs. Dorrington is asleep."

"Asleep!" Jacqueline said. "Why, it's only 9 o'clock."

He laughed. "Don't let us quarrel any more, Jackie."

"It isn't I who quarrel," she said indignantly.

"Then let us say it is I," he murmured, "and, having made of myself the culprit, we will return to the original subject."

"No. You will ask me to marry you again, and I won't."

"And yet you will give me no reason," he said gravely, coming close to her. "If you will say once with your eyes meeting mine that you do not love me I will promise not to ask you again for a fortnight."

Her eyes fell. "I want to be free."

He drew a long breath. "Oh, Little White Lady," he said, "would you feel caged to come to me? I have loved you so long, and you are only nineteen now. I was such a big boy when you used to flutter through the garden next door and peep through the hedge and beg for our roses."

"And even then you called me the Little White Lady," she reminded him.

"Yes, and when I went away two years ago I thought you would give me your heart, Little White Lady. But ever since my return you have evaded every question."

"Father needs me."

That night Philip Walford had a long talk with his host. "Is the father still daft on plant parasites?" he asked.

"Yes, and Jacqueline reads to him every night because his eyes are bad."

"It's a beastly shame," Philip flung out.

When Jackie went home she refused to talk to Philip.

"Of course I saw him," she told her sisters wearily the first morning at breakfast, "and he's just the same old Phil."

"Did he make love to you?" Minette demanded.

"I should hope not." It was their father who spoke. "You know Jacqueline is already promised."

"Oh, that," laughed Minette, "of course. But that wouldn't keep her from flirting with Philip."

Jacqueline's face flamed. "It would," she declared. "I wouldn't flirt with Philip for anything in the whole wide world. He is too good, too true, to flirt with."

Minette looked at her curiously. "After that defense," she said, "the beast had better watch out for a rival."

The goggles were turned toward her. "Minette," her father asked in a heavy voice, "whom do you call 'the beast?'"

"Von Puttkamer," said Minette saucily.

And now the goggles were turned on Jacqueline. "My dear, I have given my word to my friend."

Jackie stood up and faced him. "But I—I haven't said that I would, father," she said.

And with that she fled from the room and to the foot of the garden, where there was an old sundial that marked the dividing line between the two places. Beyond was the Walford rose garden, and on a stone bench overrun with ivy sat Philip sketching.

"Ah, my Little White Lady!" he said and made room for her, and then, as he saw her face, "What troubles you, dear?"

"Is anybody happy, Philip?" she asked, and she was very white.

He shook his head. "Who knows?" he murmured. "But all the rest of the world might weep if only I could make you smile."

"Let me sit by you and watch you," she said, "and don't ask me any questions."

With his charcoal he sketched the bench on which she sat, and, smiling whimsically, he drew her figure, changing her modern gown of dimity to one of flowing classic lines, and on her head he put a wreath of poppies. Then he drew himself at her feet clad in a leopard skin and laurel crowned, and on their faces was the radiance of love and of youth. And underneath the picture he wrote, "The Gods of Joy."

"There," he said as he showed it to her, "I have changed the faces so that no one will know. But you must hang it in your room, and when you think that the world is dark look at it and remember that the day you tell me you love me that day will you and I be gods of joy, Jackie."

After that he saw little of her, and he busied himself planning the great yearly festival that the Walfords always gave to their neighbors. This year it was to be a costume ball, held on the lawn.

"I shall go as 'Spring,'" Minette told Jacqueline, "and Lucia wants to be a 'Shepherdess,' and you might be 'Beauty' and have Von Puttkamer as the 'Beast.'"

"Don't joke about it, Minette," pleaded Jacqueline. "I hate"—

"Hush!" Minette warned. "Here he comes with father."

Von Puttkamer was big and burly and foreign. He stammered a little when he spoke to Jacqueline. "Your father has been telling me that it is all arranged—that I am to have much happiness."

"Oh," said Jacqueline, trembling, "I am not sure!"

"You are sure," said the old man impatiently. "It is all arranged. Von Puttkamer. You are to live here, and we will experiment together, and—I with my knowledge and you with your practical experience—together we shall astonish the world."

Minette followed Jacqueline up to her room. "You are crying," she said. "Why don't you say that you won't do it, Jackie?"

"You know father," Jackie responded. "When he is crossed he stays up late and drinks, and I promised mother I would watch over him."

"I know," Minette said. For a moment the two girls clung together.

But after a little while they talked of other things, and Minette's eyes, roving about the room, fell on the sketch that Philip had made.

"What a beauty! Why—why, the girl looks like you, Jackie!"

"Does she?" asked Jackie listlessly.

But when Minette had gone she studied the picture carefully, and all that night she sat up, fashioning a gown of clinging white and weaving pale pink poppies into a wreath.

And so it happened that Philip Walford, searching among the guests for the one who meant everything to him, found her on the bench in the rose garden.

"Jacqueline," he whispered.

"Philip," she said, "tonight I want to be one of the gods of joy."

"You mean?" radiantly.

"Oh, not what you think! Let me tell you, Philip—let me tell you now. I've got to marry some one else, and you must forget me."

Then she told him, leaving the worst until the last. "I wouldn't marry him only—only father drinks when he is unhappy, and he has his heart set on my marrying Von Puttkamer."

"You are burning for martyrdom," said Philip hotly.

But she was very firm. "I told you so that for tonight I might feel free, and now let's eat, drink and be merry, for tomorrow—who knows?"

He fell in with her mood, and they went back to the ballroom and danced and laughed, but all the time their hearts were heavy and their eyes were sad. At midnight he left her for an hour, and when he came back he took her to the stone bench. "Listen," he said. "Oh, Little White Lady, you are going to marry me!"

"No," she whispered.

"Yes," Philip said, and all at once he smiled down at her. "Oh, Jackie, Jackie," he said, "why didn't you tell me long ago? Von Puttkamer was one of my classmates. He is in love with a pretty fraulein, but they couldn't marry because neither of them had a penny. And he gave her up and came to America. He thought that your money would mend his broken heart, and so he let your father arrange the match. But now he's going to send for the little fraulein. I have offered him a place on my North Carolina estate, and wedding bells shall ring for both of us."

"But my father?" Jacqueline whispered.

"We will send him down south with Von Puttkamer. Those great old forests will heal all disorders of mind and soul and body, and some day we will follow them and work out all our problems together, dear heart."

"I am so happy," she whispered. "Oh, Philip, Philip, has the moment come at last when we are really the gods of joy?"

Student Co-operation.

In every college there are numbers of good upper class men who are eager to co-operate with the faculty in starting freshmen along the right path, and it is amazing that thus far so little advantage has been taken of their services. Each of these upper class men should be given a list of from five to ten freshmen whom he would make it his duty to know. He would talk over with them their work and their play, their study, their amusements, their athletics. He would make sure that each, outside of his lessons, was given a sane interest, something to do for the college, whether participation in football or in debating or in writing for the college papers. He would see to it far more effectively than the dean, or even than the advisers, that each was getting his fair chance socially. He would report cases where financial aid was needed or admonition or encouragement. As it is at present, many fellows are lonely. Many, especially from a distance, miss the recognition they deserve merely because they ignorantly roam outside the sphere of undergraduate life or, knowing no one at first, fail in with uncongenial classmates and, becoming discouraged, withdraw into themselves. To such lonely men the dangerous pleasures existing outside of college appear as substitutes for what they have missed in college. These tragedies would be far less likely to occur if all members of the class were thrown together and natural associations facilitated through the provision of upper class men and advisers.—William R. Castle, Jr., in Atlantic.

Getting Rid of a Jonah.

The little woman with the laundry blue and gangrenous green flowers on her hat all scrambled up into a wilton rug design got on the Euclid avenue car carrying a dog. It was one of those aristocratic foolish looking dogs that couldn't overtake a Welsh rabbit.

"Got a permit for that dawg?" asked the conductor when he came around for the woman's fare. "Haven't? Then you'll have to get off the car."

The woman got up, dog under one arm, as if to get off. But as she rose she snapped: "I'll not get off! So there!" Still, she walked to the rear platform, as if in contradiction of her own assertion. The conductor was ready to signal the motorman to stop.

But the woman had declared she wasn't going to get off, and she intended to keep her word. She poised the dog carefully in her palms, tossed him off into the street, at the same time bidding him "go home!"

Then she came back into the car and dropped languidly into her seat with a bored tilt to her face.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

His Reproof.

Somewhere in the pages of her "Book of Joys" Mrs. Lucy Fitch Perkins tells a delightful story of her New England clerical great-grandfather, who was a man of ingenuity and resources. She says:

He employed more than one device to secure wakefulness on the part of his weary congregation. Standing during the prayer was but one of many. My grandmother used to tell us with pride of an instance which occurred at a time when a new church edifice had been proposed and was under warm discussion. Great-grandfather thought this a worldly and unnecessary expense and emphasized his opinion by pausing in the midst of his sermon on a Sunday, saying impressively as he fixed the somnolent members of his congregation with a stern look:

"You are talking about building a new church. It seems to me quite unnecessary since the sleepers in the old one are all sound."

LOCAL OPTION CAMPAIGN.

The matter appearing in this space from time to time is furnished by the Temperance and Moral Reform League of this City, who have arranged for its Publication.

HOW WILL IT AFFECT BUSINESS?

A conservative estimate places the amount annually paid for liquor over the bars of Peterborough at $360,000. If these bars were abolished and that money went into channels of legitimate trade, who would get it? The following is probably a fairly accurate estimate:

Dry goods	$60,000.00
Groceries	60,000.00
Building, etc.	60,000.00
Boots and shoes	15,000.00
Hardware	15,000.00
Books, etc.	12,000.00
Religion	12,000.00
Entertainments	6,000.00
Pleasure trips	6,000.00
Confectionery	6,000.00
Electric lights	6,000.00
Jewellery	6,000.00
Toys	3,000.00
Photographs	3,000.00
Laundry	3,000.00

Leaving for insurance and savings, $60,000.00.

This fact is realized by merchants in places where Local Option has been tried. Mr. Ireland pointed out at the Opera House last Sunday that the merchants and business men of Owen Sound considered it a privilege to raise the sum of $1,700 last year to fight a repeal movement there, after having had three years' experience of the working of local option law, and they did that not for sentiment, but as a business proposition.

To the above statement may be added the fact that if there was no open bar the earning power of a large number of men would be greatly increased, so that a sum even larger than that mentioned would be diverted into the hands of men in legitimate business. Mr. Merchant, just sit down for a minute and figure out how much of that $300,000, or $400,000 will come your way.

Last Minute Arguments.

If one thing has been more clearly shown than another in the present campaign, it has been the fact that the opponents of Local Option do not believe in the potency of any arguments they may have to advance against its adoption. Notwithstanding invitations in this column, and the frequently expressed desire on the part of many private citizens, that they should give the public, either through the press or otherwise, the benefit of any light they may have, they have resolutely abstained from doing so. There can be but one conclusion, that they have nothing to present to the public that will carry weight, or that cannot be effectually replied to. This is a point for the public to keep clearly in mind.

There are rumours afloat to the effect that a large amount of material is being stored up by the supporters of the open bar, and that will be unloaded on the public, in the last hours of the campaign, when the possibility of replying to it is past. No attention should be paid by any one to such arguments. Anything that will not stand the test of fair discussion is of no value, and should be so treated.

Is Local Option Proving a Success?

Objection.—I voted for the Duncan and for the Scott Acts, neither of which were successful, and I therefore am not going to vote for Local Option.

Answer.—Local Option is utterly different from either the Dunkin or the Scott Acts. The mistakes that were made in these acts have been eliminated from the Local Option law with the result that the Local Option law is proving a success wherever it has been tried. Without explaining the various improvements that have been made in the law, it is sufficient to say that last year in some 97 municipalities in Ontario where Local Option had been in force three years, the liquor interest attempted to bring on a repeal vote in only 27 cases. A simple majority vote of the ratepayers would have been sufficient to have repealed the law. In only two of these cases were the liquor interests successful. These were in villages which previously had been part of the townships that had carried Local Option. When the townships carried Local Option these villages had given a majority against it. Last year the majority in these villages against Local Option was smaller than it was at the time of the previous vote.

This year the temperance forces are bringing on votes in 164 municipalities in Ontario. The liquor interests are not attempting to bring on a repeal vote in any constituency. They would do so if they thought they had a ghost of a chance of winning. The proof of the pudding is in the eating When some 200 municipalities might bring on repeal votes if they wanted to, and yet none are attempting to, it is the best proof possible that Local Option is proving a success.

The Effect on Taxes?

Objection.—If we carry Local Option the money we will lose in license fees will result in our taxes being increased.

Answer.—This is an argument that has been exploded in practically every constituency where Local Option has been carried. Results in such cities as Owen Sound, Toronto Junction, Orillia, and many others prove that taxes are not increased as a result of the introduction of Local Option. It is rumoured that the liquor interests in Peterborough are gathering information to be used, in the last few days of the campaign in an effort to show that taxes in Peterborough will be increased if Local Option is carried. Look out for these arguments and have a good laugh over them when they appear. If they would stand the light of investigation they would be brought out now.

They Generally Take It.

Objection.—I can take a drink, or should do the same, so I won't vote to leave it alone, and every one else for Local Option.

Answer.—It will be noticed that nearly all the men who say that they can take a drink or leave it alone, generally "take it." We have to deal with the facts as we find them. Everybody else must see that apart from personal practice, the public institution of the bar room, with its treating system, is a menace to good society. Local Option aims to do away with the open bar. What good has the open bar ever done you?

Hotel Accommodation Improved.

Objection.—The hotels will not be as well kept if they lose the profit they have been deriving from the open bar.

Answer.—Over 66 million people in the United States live in cities where there is no open bar. The hotels in these sections are the equal of the hotels that can be found anywhere. There are 400 municipalities in Ontario without bars. They have just as good hotel accommodation as can be found in places of the same size under license. Where the hotel keepers have tried to close their hotels or to reduce their efficiency, such as Bowmanville, companies have been formed and new hotels started that have been run on modern lines. Like most other objections of this nature, this argument lost its force long ago.

Campbellford Likes Local Option.

The following extract from an article published some time ago in the Campbellford Herald, indicates what the people of Campbellford think of Local Option:

"To the general onlooker, Local Option has wrought a marvellous change in Campbellford. During the leisure hours of the day and evenings when scores were seen to line the bars of the hotels under the license system, scarcely a man is seen to-day. Moreover, a variety of liquor is sold which is non-intoxicating, and hence the absence of drunken men.

"The most encouraging feature of it all is that the temptation is removed from the youngest element of the community. It is a cardinal principle in education that it is better to be a former than a re-former. In other words, it is better to bring up a boy without acquiring bad habits than to reclaim him after the habit has to some extent got control of him. To a large extent, under the present conditions the young and rising generation have been spared from the temptation."

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON QUESTIONS

Paul or the Grace of Giving. II. Cor. viii: 1-15.

Golden Text—Remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how He said, It is more blessed to give than to receive. Acts xx: 35.

Are these words in the Golden Text quoted from Jesus, hyperbolical, that is, a rhetorical over-statement, or is it literally true, that it is more blessed to give than to receive, and if so, why? (This question must be answered in writing by members of the club.)

Verses 16—Is it according to animal nature, or to average human nature, to give to others outside of kith and kin?

Is giving liberally, intelligently and systematically, to religion and charity, always a "grace," that is, an inclination Divinely imparted?

What is the relation between giving and loving?

If we are in need or "affliction" ourselves, will the grace of giving still operate in us, if our hearts are right?

May "deep poverty," great "joy" and rich "liberality" be in the same life, and is such a combination natural or supernatural?

There was great poverty and suffering among the Christians at Jerusalem, and the liberality of the poor churches at Macedonia to relieve their need is what Paul here refers to; contrast the evil at Jerusalem, with the resultant good grace of giving developed at Macedonia, and say which is the greater; that is did the result do as much good, or exceed the evil done by the cause?

Thus it would appear was appointed to present to the Corinthians the need of the Jerusalem Christians, to take up a collection, and to develop in them the grace of giving; why is there no work more noble, or duty more imperative, than for ministers and teachers to teach the people the duty and joy of giving?

Verses 7, 8—Paul apparently assumes that a person may abound in faith and utterance, and knowledge, * * * and in * * * love," and not abound in the grace of giving; but is he right, for how can such a thing be possible?

Paul states that he did not urge the grace of giving by "commandment"; is it therefore any less the duty, and privilege of every Christian, rich and poor, to abound in this grace?

Verse 9—What should be the supreme motive, and what is the greatest inducement to give liberally?

What is the chief grace in the resplendent character of Jesus?

Did the giving of Jesus of himself, and all he had for us, imply permanent poverty for Him, or was it the best way to all that great wealth is supposed to stand for?

Why does living of all kinds finally result in getting more of that which we give, than would be possible if we kept it? (Think of money, love, knowledge, experience, encouragement, etc.)

Verses 10, 11—What is the difference in promising a subscription to religion or benevolence and not paying it, and not paying your grocer or baker?

Verses 12-14—What is the proportion of our income which the Bible demands of us, as a minimum?

What are some of the many advantages of the tithing system?

Verse 15—What reason is there to believe that if we give systematically to God's cause that we ourselves shall never lack?

ADVERTISE in The Examiner.

...T YET RE... FOR COFFIN.

Suspective Jurymen's Assertion That He Was Not Dead Comparatively Easy to Believe.

"Your name is Herman Kaufman?"

"Yes, your honor."

"This paper," continued the court, "requests me to excuse Herman Kaufman from jury duty on the ground that he is dead. Now, remember that you have sworn to tell the truth, and think well before you answer: Are you dead?"

"No-o, your honor," was the bewildered reply, "I don't think I am."

"You claim that you are alive?"

"Y-e-s, your honor."

"That will do. Now take this paper back to the commissioner of jurors."

The man did so. When the commissioner examined the certificate it bore the following indorsement in the justice's handwriting: "The deceased, appearing before me in open court, insists, under oath, that he is not dead. Please investigate, and, if his testimony be false, have him indicted for perjury."—New York Press.

NATIONAL FOOD OF MEXICANS

The Tortilla is the Bread Used by Our Southern Neighbors—Frijoles Are Boiled Beans.

The tortilla is the ancient Indian bread of Mexico. Its only constituent is Indian corn (maize), which the women soak in lime water until the kernels are at the point of bursting, then wash thoroughly until it is free from lime, when they grind it by rubbing it on a large block of stone, specially cut for the purpose, with a smaller stone which they hold in their hands.

The operation looks very much like rubbing clothes on a washboard and is a laborious and tedious one. The lime renders the corn dough adhesive, like wheat flour dough, and it is easily patted between the hands into cakes the size and shape of an ordinary griddle. Though no salt or leaven is added fresh tortillas are exceedingly palatable.

The one other food mainstay is frijoles—ordinary beans. They are boiled to a mush and with a liberal quantity of lard are warmed as required in a flat earthen dish that answers for a frying pan. The very poor people do not always have the luxury of frijoles and when they do have them cannot always afford the lard.

English Difficult to Pronounce.

The difficulty of English for strangers does not lie in its orthography, but in its pronunciation. Abroad, people will constantly say that they can read and write English readily while unable to utter a word or to understand a word of the spoken language; as, of course, vice versa, a great many English and Americans can read and write French long before they can understand, or make themselves understood; the other languages are just as difficult for them to pronounce as English is for others. The only difference is that English stands alone with its system or lack of system, of pronunciation. When a Frenchman knows how to write German, he is at the same time able to speak the language, if not beautifully, at least so as to be understood; the same holds for a German speaking French.—Prof. Albert Schinz, in the North American Review.

All Can Work and Try.

Milton wrote: "Who best can suffer, best can do." The progress and success of the other fellow always looks easy. But only the other fellow knows all about it. We cannot all work just the same way. Brilliant minds make great leaps. They are daring and courageous. Timid ones must plod because it is their nature. The old saying, "What others have done, I can do," is not strictly true, and is misleading to the inferior intellect. A strong man can lift great weights, for he has the muscular strength. Weaker men cannot do what he has done. But they can work and try. That's about all that most of us can do.

Knew When to Stop.

The shrewd lawyer knows when to stop questioning, and none is more shrewd than the one who, conducting a case of bribery, questioned a man the other day, who is rated high in the business world.

"Have you yourself ever refused a bribe?" he asked.

"No, but—"

"That is all," said the lawyer.

At a latter time he was asked why he had dismissed the witness so soon.

"Because," he replied, "I knew by the 'but' that he was going to tell me no one had ever attempted to bribe him."

HID BAD TEETH OF EMPRESS

Origin of the Lace Handkerchief Ascribed to Vanity of First Napoleon's Consort.

One of the strangest facts illustrating the vanity of woman is that the lace handkerchief owed its introduction to the Empress Josephine's bad teeth. Josephine's vanity is no new subject with historians, who as a group, however, neglect the care with which she kept the world from observing that her teeth were neither ornamental nor useful. It is with Josephine's vanity as it was manifested toward Napoleon that historians are concerned, not with her instinctive care for her own appearance. She never laughed except from behind the cover of a lace handkerchief. It was a trick the meaning of which was known to every woman in France, yet so contradictory is feminine nature that it took short time for women of all degrees to give themselves to imitation. Whether possessed of good teeth or bad, the French woman in Josephine's golden days always pressed a handkerchief to her lips when she laughed, and because lace handkerchiefs were Josephine's pride they came into general use. There has been a change since Josephine's time, however, for now the rule is to show a handkerchief as little as possible. Even the daintiest linen and lace specimens are to be held from view.

PENS VALUED BY COLLECTORS

Those Used by Great Writers and Statesmen Bring High Prices at Public Sales.

The pen used by Charles Dickens just before his death, which has been sold at Messrs. Sotheby's rooms for £19 10s, must yield the palm of costliness to the well-worn gold pen, used by "Boz" for many years, which found a purchaser some time ago for over £40.

At the sale of the Dalhousie collection a quill pen used by Wellington when writing to Queen Victoria in 1844 brought only 5½ guineas; while one of Sir Walter Scott's pens, selected by Lord Dalhousie in 1829 from Scott's writing table at Abbotsford, only realized three guineas more.

Among the most valuable pens in the world are one owned by Mr. Isaac Reed of New York, carved from a portion of George Washington's lensbox, and used by Lincoln when president, and the quill of a golden-eagle's wing, the property of the Empress Eugenie, with which the treaty of Paris was signed in 1856.—London Tit-Bits.

Ending a Letter.

The simplicity of "yours" as a letter ending would have astounded Jeremy Taylor, whose letters to John Evelyn often wind up with perfect triumphs of complexity in this respect. His best is, "Believe me that I am, in great heartiness and dearness of affection, Dear Sir, your obliged and most affectionate friend and servant, J. Taylor." On other occasions he was "Your most affectionate and endeared friend and servant," or "Your very affectionate friend and hearty servant." Even in his shortest perorations of the kind the "affectionate" and the "servant" are always the two indispensable words. Probably no man, woman or child would combine these two at the end of a letter today.

May Cure Snoring, Too.

"I've found a cure for nightmare," said the man who will eat despite his subsequent sufferings. "When I go to bed at night I slip a string through an empty spool, secure the spool firmly so it will not slide, and then tie the string around my waist in such a way that the spool comes in the middle of my back. The result is that if I try to turn on my back in my sleep I lie on the spool, and I can assure you it wakens me promptly.

"No, it isn't pleasant to be wakened in that way, but it is better than having to go through one of the diabolical nightmares from which I have suffered for several years."

Let Him Stay a Man.

A man soon gets mighty tired of treating his wife like a goddess. If he cannot be at ease with her, and smoke when he pleases, and take off his coat if he wants to, and throw ashes on the floor and cigar stubs all over the house, he is going to be mighty uncomfortable, and long to go where he can. For it is born in a man to like to do these things, just as it is born in a girl to like to do her own pet things. Moreover, if a girl has once known a man in a perfectly comfortable chummy way, she will find him worth twice as much as before; he dropped his awe of her. Men are pretty nice as they are, but for goodness sake, don't try to make a man ladylike. He isn't and won't be if he is even half a man.—Atchison Globe.

HIS CHANCE TO BE A MAN

Pickert pulled his slouch hat still further down over his eyes, and looked stealthily at the store as he shuffled past. But in that glance he had seen all that he needed to finish his report. He had walked this way before.

The Captain was a strict man, and if a report did not please him, Pickert well knew that he was not the one to show any leniency in his dealings with the offender. But he was confident that his report this time could not fail to please his superior.

It was not infrequently that Pickert wished that he could leave it all. The desire to be honest again would almost master him at times, but when he had about made up his mind, the thought would come to him that there was no other place for him in life.

Who would give employment to a man wearing such rags as he was obliged to wear, and on whose face the deeds of the last two years had not failed to leave the remarks?

No, it was no use to try to be decent once more. He got enough from the spoils to keep body and soul together, and though that was about all, it was better than not being able to have even a crust and shelter.

The Captain dressed well—almost elegantly. He did not take an active part in the affairs which his men carried on in the night. He only superintended the business—it was by far the safer way—yet to him fell the maximum share of the ill-gotten gains.

Once Pickert had been honored and respected, but that was before he had left his home for the west. Not finding the gold which had lured him there, he had drifted back to an eastern city, and had fallen in with bad company, and eventually, not having a cent left, he had joined the Captain's band.

Since that time he had tried to thrust all thoughts of his old home from his mind, but despite his efforts it was impossible.

Pickert hated the small, dingy room under the eaves which he was obliged to call home, and to-day he dreaded more than ever to return to it. Just now he could not help thinking of the home of his boyhood days and his mother who had loved and trusted him. He had left her with the assurance that some day he would return with gold enough to give her everything that heart could wish.

And how well he remembered her answer: "Never mind the gold, Jim. All I ask is that my boy shall be a good and an honest man." And he had told her that he would be all that she wished. And now—

Pickert's rough hand stole up to his eyes, and he murmured something under his breath.

As he was passing a small church in the most disreputable part of the city—near his home—his was arrested by the sound of singing. Just now was a great revival season, and noon services were being held in most of the churches.

A feeling which he could not throw off impelled him to enter, and he sneaked into a seat by the door. He was too wicked to be here, he muttered to himself—in a minute he would be moving on—but he would wait until they had finished singing.

His eyes grew moist as he listened to the hymn. How many times in his boyhood he had heard his mother sing "The Ninety and Nine." Then he had been good and honorable. What would she say if she could see him now? It would break her heart.

The tears fell now upon the ragged coat, and at that moment Pickert registered a vow in his heart. "I'll be a man again—it's not too late."

Then swiftly the though came, "What will the Captain say if you back out?"

Then as quickly the answer, "It won't make no difference what he says—or what he does. I'm tired of doing wrong."

He started to leave the church, but he stopped suddenly, petrified with amazement. The Captain stood by the door! When he had recovered himself he walked up to him.

"I'm through doing your dirty work," he whispered hoarsely in his ear. "You can do what you want to me—I don't care—I'm through with this miserable kind of a life."

"Let us walk along together a little ways," was all the Captain said.

Pickert was astounded. What had happened? All the Captain's bravado was gone and his black eyes had softened.

"I watched you go in—I wanted to see what you was up to," the Captain said, after a while, "and I followed. I ain't been inside a church before for years. You heard that hymn, Pickert. She used to sing it when I was a boy—my mother, I mean, and it made me think of—when I was different. But it's been too long now in this business to turn over a new leaf, but it's not too late for you to begin now. You shall have a chance. Here's enough tin to take you out west. When you get there go to work, and start over again."

He had put his hand into his pocket, and as he finished speaking he thrust something into Pickert's hand. Before the latter had a chance to say a word, the Captain turned on his heel and walked away.

For the first time in two years Pickert raised his head and looked upward. "Thank God for this chance to begin again," he murmured, reverently. "I'll yet be the man that I promised mother I'd be."

And this time Pickert kept his word.

Back to the Farm.

There is just one way for the people of the city to find it possible to buy eggs, chickens, meat and flour for less money—that is for some of them to leave the city and go back to raising more hens, more cattle, and growing more wheat. The fact is that the country is getting top-heavy. The cities are calling too heavily on the producing areas. Farming is getting to be one of the most profitable businesses of the country because the proportion of non-producers is getting so large. It is all a matter of supply and demand; just now the demand for foodstuffs is larger than it has ever been in proportion to the supply.—Denver Republican.

In Memory of Samuel Johnson.

The memory of Samuel Johnson has been honored by the placing of a stained glass window in St. Clement Danes church, in London. It is near the pew wherein he used to sit. Boswell gives us a glimpse of the good man in that pew: "His behavior was, as I had imaged to myself, solemnly devout. I never shall forget the tremulous earnestness with which he pronounced the awful petition in the Litany, 'In the hour of death and in the day of judgment, good Lord deliver us.'"

Worldly Wisdom.

As there is a worldly happiness which God perceives to be no more than disguised misery; so there are worldly honors which in his estimation are reproach, so there is a worldly wisdom which in his sight is foolishness. Of this worldly wisdom the characters are given in the Scriptures, and placed in contrast with those of the wisdom which is from above. The one is the wisdom of the crafty, the other that of the upright; the one terminates in selfishness, the other in charity; the one is full of strife and bitter envyings, the other of mercy and of good fruits.—Blair.

The KITCHEN CABINET

ON THE CRICK.

THERE'S ice still on the crick,
Yet not so very thick,
But underneath the water quivers,
Like it were cold, and had the shivers
Spring comes late to the crick.

The water, greenish-blue,
The grass and rushes, too,
Adorn the edges where, 'twould seem
The ghosts of water-lilies dream
Of summer breeze and dew.

Their dreams will all come true,
Of lilies, breeze and dew.
And I? in summer, from that crick,
Of perch and bass I'll take my pick.
My dreams are real, too.

Timely Tips.

One of the very "timeliest tips" is one on the end of your rubber. Few people realize that rubbers may be mended as well as shoes.

In the south they often add a teaspoon of Orleans molasses to the frying bacon. It makes the meat more delicate.

Add a handful of chopped parsley or onion to the veal when cooking. It improves it as much as mint adds to the lamb.

Blankets should be washed in luke warm, not hot water.

Laughter is a great aid to digestion. There was a hygienic reason for the presence of the old-time jester at the king's table.

Don'ts for the Nursery.

Don't feed the children highly-seasoned food. Don't allow them to use pepper freely.

Don't give them doughnuts or batter-cakes, or any food made of flour which has not been cooked for a long time.

Don't let them eat bananas until you have scraped away the outer white substance, just next the pulp. It is the indigestible part of the fruit. The children may object to this as it makes the banana sticky and hard to manage. But this may be avoided by peeling the skin gradually.

Wet Shoes.

One of the troubles with wet shoes is the pain attendant upon putting them on again after a good soaking. They are stiff and unyielding. To avoid this, fill the shoes while wet with scraps of old newspapers. Stuff them in tightly, holding the leather stretched in place. They will slip on easily when dry.

PURITY FLOUR

And Its Keeping Qualities

SOME people find it necessary to buy a considerable quantity of flour at one time—sufficient to last for a long period. Naturally they are anxious to procure a flour of the kind best adapted to lengthy storage.

There are two important reasons why PURITY FLOUR possesses these qualities. One is that it is made entirely from Manitoba Hard Wheat. The other lies in the fact that the careful milling necessary to produce "Purity" absolutely excludes all low-grade particles of the wheat berry. It's the high grade Manitoba Hard Wheat Flour that keeps—stands longest storage. That's "Purity."

"Purity" flour may cost a little more, but is more than worth the difference. Try it. Watch results both for quality and yield.

Was Black Sheep.

Collingwood, Ont., Dec. 4.—John E. Reid, who, according to despatches, was murdered in Pulaski, N.Y., on Thursday night. He was the son of Mr. and Mrs. John Edward Reid, was born in 1868, and came to this town with his parents some years ago.

Yesterday morning his father expressed little surprise on hearing that his son had met an untimely end.

On the books of the local police magistrate there is a conviction for theft registered against the young fellow. He left the town last year, and his people heard little of him from that time till now.

Strikers Petition Mayor.

New York, Dec. 4.—Twenty-five hundred striking shirtwaist operatives who demand higher wages and better working conditions, marched through the east side yesterday to the City Hall, where they presented a petition to Mayor McClellan.

They asked among other things that he put an immediate stop to the insults and intimidations and to the abuses to which the police are alleged to have subjected the women while picketing.

"Leper" Early Detained Again.

Washington, Dec. 4.—John B. Early, the alleged leper, who was arrested here Thursday under the authority of an act of Congress to prevent the spread of contagious diseases in the district of Columbia, and put under quarantine, declared yesterday he would fight against his detention.

Queen's Trustees.

Kingston, Dec. 4.—A special meeting of the board of trustees of Queen's University will be held on Dec. 17 in order to appoint a committee to confer with the general assembly's commission on the subject of the future relations of the university to the Presbyterian Church.

Was Shy of Clothes.

Hamilton, Dec. 4.—Considerable excitement was caused last evening when a man in his bare feet tried to climb over the fence at the Gore Park. His whole attire consisted of a pair of trousers and a shirt. The police gave chase, but he disappeared up Hughson street.

Ten-Storey Hotel For C.P.R.?

Montreal, Dec. 4.—It is rumored that the C.P.R. are contemplating the building of a large, modern downtown hotel on the old St. Lawrence Hall site, which was purchased by the company three years ago.

State Takes a Hand.

Boston, Dec. 4.—The state authorities intervened yesterday in the labor dispute at Ludlow, Mass., where a strike of 1800 operatives in the bagging mills of the Ludlow Manufacturing Associates has resulted in the eviction of twenty-four families from the company's houses.

Poem Non-Personal.

New York, Dec. 4.—Wm. Watson, the English poet, author of "The Woman With the Serpent's Tongue," arrived yesterday. He said:

"I merely wrote a poem on a general theme; that is all. I made reference to absolutely no woman in particular."

STORM IN BRITAIN

Disasters at Sea as Result of Heavy Gales Are Reported From All Parts and Many Sailors Have Perished —Boston and Portland, Ore., Contribute to the Death List— Gales on the Pacific Coast.

London, Dec. 4.—In a terrific gale that raged yesterday over the British Isles the steamer Thistlemere, coal-laden, went to her doom off Appledere, in Barnstable Bay, and it is believed that her entire crew of thirty men perished. Four bodies have been washed ashore.

The Thistlemere was in command of Capt. Yeo and was bound from Liverpool for an American port. She was of 4,008 tons and was built in 1905 at Stockton, Eng.

Another vessel was in distress in the same vicinity, but proceeded on her way, and it is hoped that she may have saved some of the crew of the Thistlemere, whose chief engineer is safe at Barr.

It is feared another disaster occurred in the Irish Channel. The Isle of Man steamer Ellen Vannin, with a crew of 21 and 13 passengers, left Ramsay, Isle of Man, for Liverpool at midnight on Thursday, but has not since been heard from. A mail bag and two lifeboats washed ashore on the banks of the Mersey leaves little doubt that she foundered.

Small vessels everywhere were at the mercy of the storm and Lloyds reports eight of them ashore at various points. Their crews, however, all escaped.

The British steamer Congress, which arrived at Falmouth yesterday, reports that during the storm her captain, the mate and one seaman were washed overboard by mountainous seas.

Havoc Off Newfoundland.

Birchy Cove, Nfld., Dec. 4.—Two schooners of the Gloucester, Mass., fishing fleet, the Mabel D. Hines and the Henry M. Stanley, were wrecked in the violent northeast gale which has swept Newfoundland waters in the past few days. The schooner John R. Bradley, the vessel which carried Dr. Cook's Arctic expedition, is also reported missing, and wreckage is piled all along the coast.

Foundered at Sea.

Portland, Oregon, Dec. 4.—Advices received by the U. S. weather bureau from Tatoosh Island, Wash., state that the British four-masted bark Matterhorn foundered at sea Nov. 27, seventy miles off Umatilla Reef. The first mate, steward and four sailors were drowned. Twenty-seven of the crew were saved.

Only One Wreck.

Boston, Dec. 4.—With the softening yesterday of the weather conditions which have been unusually boisterous for nearly ten days, coastwise traffic was resumed and several vessels in precarious positions were able to extricate themselves.

The schooners at anchor on Nantucket Shoals, whose position aroused some anxiety earlier in the week, were found to be all right.

Only one disaster occurred, however, the wreck of the schooner Mizpah and the loss of three of her crew on the lip end of the cape Thursday night.

Nova Scotia Schooner Ashore.

Boston, Dec. 4.—The northeast gale which has been raging along the coast is abating somewhat.

Two wrecks have occurred and three men are known to have perished.

The British schooner Mizpah, from Lunenburg, N.S., for Boston, went ashore Thursday night on Peaked Hill Bar, off Highland Light. It was impossible to launch life boats, and the life-savers brought the breeches buoy into play. Capt. Westerhaven and three of his men were saved, but the other three were washed overboard and lost.

The schooner Borda, which foundered off Nantucket, will be a complete loss. Her captain and crew were picked up at sea by the steamship Vaderland.

Granite Workers Stay Out.

Montpelier, Vermont, Dec. 4—Hopes for a speedy settlement of the strike of 5,000 granite workers here, in Barre, and in Northfield, vanished yesterday when the Northfield branch, the first to strike, refused to accept the Barre Granite Manufacturers' Association proposition, that the use of the bushing hammer, over which the strike started, be made optional between Dec. 11 and March 15.

Strangled by Chewing Gum.

New York, Dec. 4.—Little Lottie Menninger, whose body was found on a tenement roof Thursday, may have been the victim of an accident. A quantity of chewing gum was lodged in the child's larynx, sufficient to have caused death, the physicians state.

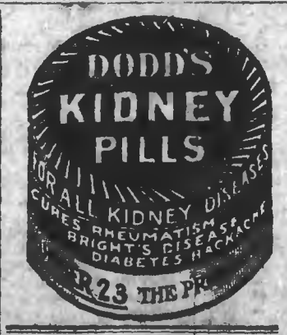
Ottawa, Dec. 4.—The total revenue of the Dominion for the eight months of the fiscal year which closed on Nov. 30, was $64,656,509, as compared with $56,115,227 for the same period last year, an increase of $8,541,822.

For the month of November alone, the revenue was $8,748,923, as compared with $6,867,968 for November, 1908.

Expenditures for the eight months totalled $42,726,560, as compared with $45,378,957 for the first eight months of last fiscal year, a decrease of $2,650,388.



SCHOOLS ARE CLOSED.

Sturgeon Falls Teachers Can't Get Their Salaries.

Sturgeon Falls, Ont., Dec. 4.—The public schools of Sturgeon Falls are closed to-day and the scholars at their homes for an indefinite vacation, its duration depending upon a solution of the financial problem which has been thrust upon the trustees.

Public school ratepayers are indignant at the state of affairs, which has deprived their children of the instruction for which they have been paying taxes.

Since the plant of the Imperial Paper Mills went into liquidation about two years ago, business has been seriously affected in the town, as the plant was the principal and only industry of any size in the community and employed a large number of hands, the mills being practically closed down during the receivership.

On account of a dispute over the amount of taxes due from the mills and the liquidation proceedings, a large sum in public school taxes has been tied up, and the town owes the public school nine thousand dollars on the levies of 1907-8, besides the year's levy.

The teachers have only received $30 each since the midsummer vacation and yesterday they resolved to quit in a body, as there seems no immediate prospect of receiving any money on their salaries, and the prospect of living without means does not appeal to them after subsisting three months on $10 per month.

The town council has in view the submitting of a bylaw to the electors authorizing the consolidation of the municipal debt and the issue of debentures to provide financial relief, but there is a feeling among the ratepayers that the bylaw is in some way connected with the present situation, and it may meet with substantial opposition.

Trainmen Now on Strike.

St. Paul, Minn., Dec. 4.—With 1,500 men imported to take the places of the striking switchmen who are members of the Switchmen's Union of North America, and those strikers who are members of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen returning to work, managers of the Great Northern and Northern Pacific Railroads last night asserted that the strike was about over.

The strike leaders, however, despite the desertion of the trainmen and the gradual resumption of traffic, last night asserted that the strike had only begun. Freight congestion is not appreciably relieved.

After a conference yesterday afternoon with President Hawley of the Switchmen's Union, and E. W. Decker of the clearing house, Governor Eberhart announced that a well-defined movement had been started to effect a settlement of the strike.

Shot Boy In Audience.

Sudbury, Dec. 4.—Dr. Whitecloud, an Indian patent medicine doctor, more or less famous throughout Ontario, is lodged in Copper Cliff jail.

On Wednesday night while performing in a public hall he claims to have been disturbed by small boys. One of the doctor's thrillers is trick rifle shooting, and failing to quiet the small boys, it is alleged, he shot one of them while doing his rifle act.

After lingering for a night and a day between life and death, the boy died in Copper Cliff hospital Thursday night. An inquest was being held yesterday afternoon. Arrested on Thursday for wounding, Whitecloud pleaded guilty and was remanded to jail for a week awaiting developments of the boy's wound.

He will now have to answer the more serious offence of killing the boy.

Miss Guthrie In Jail.

Barrie, Dec. 4.—Becoming suspicious, when he learned yesterday that Mr. and Mrs. Guthrie had left town mysteriously without his knowledge, Bondsman James Goodwin withdrew his name from the bond on Miss Clara Guthrie, aged 17, under indictment for perjury in connection with a fire inquest. She could not or would not say where her mother had gone.

The injured Miss Montgomery, an adopted daughter of the Guthries, upon whom Miss Guthrie was in attendance, was taken to the hospital, and the Children's Aid Society have charge of the two Guthrie boys.

Killed While Stealing Ride.

Woodstock, Ont., Dec. 4.—A man whose name, according to papers found in his pockets, was Jas. Brown of Chatham, or Toronto, was yesterday morning run over and killed by a G.T.R. freight train about one mile east of Ingersoll, G.T.R. station, his body being cut in two.

It is stated that he had been stealing a ride, and had been put off the train at Ingersoll Station, but on the train being started again, he once more climbed on board and stayed on for almost a mile, when in some manner he fell under the wheels.

A Queer Wooden Flower.

A queer wooden flower is to be found in Guatemala. This flower is called the rose of hell from the fact that it grows on the sides of Mount Agua and round the seared edges of the volcano of Fuego. It has four distinct petals, the outsides of which are covered with bark like that of a tree. The stem, usually about a foot high, is of solid wood covered with bark. The flower measures nearly a foot across.

KEEPING IN TOUCH WITH HOME

A letter carries words, but the Bell Service has been brought up to such a point of perfection that the modulations of the voice are clearly heard.

The cheery tones show that the talker is well and in good spirits. The call may come from a suburban village or a distant city, but within the limits of the carrying power of the voice the Bell Service carries the tone as well. You get a personal interview with a friend hundreds of miles away.

PARKDALE HOLDING WELL SCORE AT HALF TIME 6 TO 5

Canoeists Surprised Varsity in Canadian Final To-day and Made a Great Showing in the First Half---Lawson Unable to Shake Off the Splendid Tackling of the Parkdale Wings.

Special Wire to The Examiner.

The attendance at to-day's game is estimated at 3,800 and the gate receipts $2,100.

Rosedale Grounds, Toronto, Dec. 4. —There was nothing like the crush around the gates as at the famous game of last Saturday, but the stands were by no means deserted at this afternoon's final Rugby game of the year between Varsity and Parkdale Canoe Club team for the chapionship of Canada. The students were out enmasse, and though in smaller numbers than a week ago, still there was enough of them to make things lively with their songs and cheers. The general public was sparsely represented half an hour before the game, but after that they began to come in, many of them decked in the colours of the Parkdale Club. The weather was even more ideal than a week ago. The sun shone like a true Canadian Indian summer day, and one could not help but feel enthusiastic as the warm rays beat down. In fact the students and public in the bleachers found it more comfortable than those in the grand stand, where the roof kept out the sun. The field was better to-day. Last week it was slippery and in places almost muddy. To-day, however, the grass was almost like in midsummer, consequently fast. The student body was on hand early and before the players appeared were giving their popular songs and yells, aided by the Highlands' Band. Parkdale were first out of the dressing room and were greeted with cheers and the Varsity cry. The teams lined up as follows:

Varsity—Dixon, back; Lawson, Newton, Gall, half backs; Foulds, quarter; Ritchie, Ball, Rankin, scrimmage; Kingston, Muir, inside wing; Lajoie, Hume, middle wing; Kingston, Muir, inside wing; Lajoie, Hume middle wing; Thomson Gage, outside wing.

Parkdale—Brady, back; Moore Killaly, Cromar, halves; J. Dissette, quarter; Leonard, Duncan, Addison, scrimmage; Ross, F. Dissette, inside wing; Meegan, Harper, middle wing; Barber, Brookbank, outside wing.

Referee—Dr. W. B. Hendry.
Umpire—W. A. Hewitt.

First Quarter.

Varsity won the toss and chose to kick west. On an exchange of punts Varsity gained 10 yards and on the first down got three more. Gall kicked and for two downs Parkadle were held. The ball was booted to Gall, who passed to Dixon, who made a 20 yard dodging run. On the first down Varsity wings broke through, and Thompson made a 15 yard run. Varsity tried to buck on the first down but were held and the same happened on the second. They tried it again, but Parkdale held them once more and Varsity lost possession amid Parkdale cheers. Parkdale kicked on the third down on the 35 yard line, and Gall returned to Parkdale quarter. They were held for two downs and then Gall fumbled. Parkdale wings followed the ball to centre, where it went out of touch. Twice more Varsity tried to break through, but could no, so Gall punted. Harper tried an end run, but gained nothing on it, and on the next down the ball went into the on the 40 yard line. Thompson tried an end run but failed. Gall kicked to Parkdale's quarter where Cromar fumbled and Brady recovered, but was forced to rouge. Varsity 1, Parkdale 0.

The Parkdale wings followed fast and got Gall at centre before he had a chance to kick. Thompson made 20 yards on a run and on Gall's punt Cromar again fumbled on his 10 yard line, but kept possession. On the second down Parkdale lost possession on off-side. Gall made a short end run, getting over for the first try. Varsity 6, Parkdale 0.

On an exchange of punts Brady made a bad fumble and Varsity got the ball at centre. Gall punted to Cromar who made pretty 20 yard run. On the first down the ball was booted to Gall who kicked in to touch on Parkdale's 30 yard line. In the ensuing scrimmage Hume was laid out for a short time. Parkdale then tried a long pass but Varsity got it and on the first down Gage went around the right end for 15 yards. An exchange of punts followed and Gall fumbled. Parkdale was playing a good game. The ball was being dribbled to Varsity's 10 yard line when the whistle blew for the quarter. Varsity 6, Parkdale 0.

Second Quarter.

Moore made a nice catch of a long punt when the play was resumed. On the second down Barber broke through for 8 yards. Then the ball was booted out of touch. Parkdale got it on an offside and Killaly punted to Gall who again fumbled, but the ball was called back on an offside play. On exchange of punts the ball was carried to Parkdale's 30 yard line, where Gage made a beautiful flying tackle. An exchange of punts followed, when Gall kicked to Brady on Parkdale's 15 yard line. Twice Lawson tried to get away with runs but failed. Varsity then took ball behind the line but it was called back as no yards were given .Cromar made a nice short run but Parkdale lost ball on off-side. A punt to Gall, who made a nice running catch followed. Lawson tried to get away but Barber nailed him at centre. Gall kicked into touch and on two downs Parkdale lost 5 yards. Cromar kicked to Gall who fumbled but kept possession. In the ensuing scrimmage Meighen was laid out for a minute. An exchange of punts landed the ball on Parkdale'sc 40 yard line with Parkdale in possession. Killaly kicked to Gall who again fumbled and Parkdale got possession. Another kick followed and once more Gall fumbled but recovered. On first down the ball was passed out but Meighen broke through, secured, and went for a try. Varsity 6, Parkdale 5. Dissette failed to convert. The ball was carried to Parkdale's 10 yard line, when half time came. Score—Varsity 6, Parkdale 5.

TO-DAY'S MARKET

Prices Were Ordinary — No Marked Changes Since a Week Ago.

There was a large attendance at the weekly market this morning, with but little changes in the various prices. Butter at 25c., eggs at 30c. and fowl at practically the same figures that have obtained for weeks were again registered. Pork at 11c. and 13c., lamb at 10c. and 12c. was plentiful. Several of the farmers attempted to boost the price of beef but competition was too keen. Prices ranged from 56-c. to 5 1-2-6½c. and to 6 and 7c. for fronts and hind quarters respectively. Potatoes at 50c. a bag and plenty of smaller vegetables were also features. Altogether it was quite an ordinary market with no alarming advances in the farmers' demands for their goods.

CAPTAIN BERNIER'S PROPOSED POLAR ROUTE FROM ALASKA TO BE ATTEMPTED BY AMUNDSEN

Reasons for His Belief in Success of a Trip to the Pole Established Upon His Own Experience---Predictions Made Before Arctic Club in New York Were Fulfilled to the Letter---Has Spent $20,000 of His Own Money in Trips During Recent Years.

Captain Bernier is an enthusiast. If he were not he would not have spent $20,000 of his own money in the work to which he has during the past years devoted his undivided attention. His words ring with a convincing tone as he predicts the importance of the north country from a commercial standpoint. The wealth of the fisheries that have yet to be touched, the fortunes that can be made out of seaweed, the possibilities that the ranges of rocky hills are secreting mineral wealth are emphasized by Captain Bernier. He has been there and he has learned to trust the country and the natives. He refers to Alaska and mentoins the wealth of its fisheries, its fur bearing animals, its gold and the other resources that have yielded annually many millions to the United States.

Last year in New York at a dinner of the Arctic Club of which he was made Vice-President, the Captain made three predictions, all of which were fulfilled according to his statements. He said the Wellman balloon dash for the pole would not be successful, similarly another expedition that was then setting out, and he stated that the barrels that had been set adrift off the west coast of Alaska five years before would be found on the east coast of Greenland.

In connection with the first statement Capt. Bernier stated in an interview that there are constant winds from the north, against which even a dirigible balloon would be helpless. Walter Wellman did not meet with success even as the Captain had said.

These polar winds blow at a minimum rate of about 12 miles an hour and the recording apparatus had registered 115 miles an hour as the maximum. The enormous wind speed can scarcely be appreciated. It was then midwinter and the "Arctic" was covered with a blanket of snow and ice, the men living in the hold. In the worst gales they were forbidden to go outdoors. Sixty to eighty miles an hour is the frequent rate of the wind and in some of the worst gales a man would be swept o fthis feet.

Captain Bernier's opinion of the stories of Dr. Cook and Commander Peary is not for publication. It is a subject he does not speak about even to intimate friends. Captain Bernier has planned a dash for the Pole, which he hopes to make some time and in which he has great confidence. It is to set sail from the west coast of Alaska and to steer towards the pole. He would soon be caught in the ice and would have to be satisfied with its motion. From his experience he has found that the Arctic ice moves slowly and the trip would likely take about four years. The fate of the barrels mentioned above as reaching the eastern shore of Greenland bears out, he states, his idea. He would be able to follow with the ice until within striking distance of the Pole and then make a dash for it. Captain Bernier has advanced this proposition for a number of years and Raol Amunsden starts in July next year to attempt it. He is now in the United States securing supplies and his vessel is on its way around Capt Horn. Needless to say Captain Bernier would like to be making the trip himself. It has been his idea and now a foreigner is to test it.

The land he has claimed for Canada is equal in extent to France. At the Oriental Hotel yesterday he had records and curios taken from posts left by Sir John Franklin in 1820. When he lifted them he left his own record and the inventory of what Franklin had done. The old tin tubes rusted and timeworn tell the story of the gallant Englishman that braved the attempt to find the Northwest passage, which finally cost him his life. Captain Bernier leaves bottles in these places.

THE MENDEL STUDIO

Considerable overtime is being required at Mendel's photograph studio these days to keep up with the pro-Christmas orders and to escape the extra rush next week. Mendel's artistic developments in sepia, carbons and other finishes are enjoying an enviable reputation, and his studio always contains early and late sitters who admire his work.

Exquisite taste should mark a Christmas gift, and if it should be a photograph made at Mendel's no doubt need exist on this point.

QUEEN'S GRADUATES GATHER AT AN ENJOYABLE BANQUET

Splendid Address Delivered by Prof. Laird and Dr. Dyde of Queen's University---Dr. Dyde's Eloquent Reply to the Toast of "Canada"---Prof. Laird Spoke of the Growth and Progress of Queen's University.

It was an enjoyable banquet that was held last evening in the beautiful dining room of the Hotel National when the local graduates, undergraduates and benefactors of Queen's University to the number of about forty gathered for the purpose of renewing and making acquaintance with friends and fellow graduates of this great institution and ultimately to form a Queen's Alumni Association. The occasion was honoured by the presence of Dr. Dyde and Rev. Prof. Laird, of the Faculty of Queen's University, whose eloquent addresses proved very interesting.

Dr. Dyde in responding to the toast to Canada," stated that it behooved Canadians to think nationally, imperially and humanly. This great Dominion, he said, should be "an united Canada, in an united empire for an united race." On this motto, he made the basis of his remarks and he pointed out that he believed that when Great Britain asked for assistance in adding strength to her navy, it was Canada's duty to help. The burden should not be on the Motherland, but Canada should act as a daughter in her mother's house.

Rev. Prof. Laird, replying to the toast "Our Alma Mater" spoke of the growth of Queen's University and its great influence in the upbuilding of the Dominion.

These Present.

At eight o'clock the guests assembled in the pretty dining hall of the hotel, which was used last evening for the first time since the fire, and presented an attractive appearance. An excellent dinner had been provided by Mine Host Dennison. Mr. Richard Lees, M.A., acted as chairman and those present were Rev. Prof. Laird and Dr. Dyde, Kingston, Rev. S. S. Burns and Mrs. Burns, Lakefield, Ald. G. A. Gillespie, Rev. J. G. and Mrs. Potter, Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Waddell and Mr. R. M. Waddell, Dr. and Mrs. G. C. Leach, Mr. and Mrs. R. G. Lawler, J. F Harvey, L J. Pettit, Dr. Nicolle, Hastings, Mr. E. L. Goodwill, Dr. Greer, Dr. McGrath, Dr Gallivan, C. Hewitt Amys, M.D., Mr. J. Wilfred Kelly, Geo. W. Hofferd, Mr. W. J. Dunlop and Mrs Dunlop, Mr. J. J. Keyes and wife, Mr. R. F. Downey, Miss Lexa Howson, Mr. and Mrs. W. H Robertson, Miss E. Alford, Mr. J. H. Burnham, Mr. A. Mowat and Mrs. A. Mowat, Mr. S. J. Stubbs, Mrs. Richard Lees, Mr. and Mrs. and Mrs. J. M. Rossel and Mr. Stanfield Lord.

Chairman's Remarks.

After the toast to the King had been honoured, the chairman, Mr. Richard Lees, stated that a number of the graduates of Queen's had felt, for some time, the need of a local organization. Some weeks ago Prof. Laird visited here and last evening's gathering was then decided upon. The purpose of an association, the chairman said, was to keep in touch with the needs of the University and get acquainted with each other. He was glad to welcome Prof. Laird and Dr. Dyde who he was sure had something interesting to say to them. He then called upon Rev. S. S. Burns, of Lakefield, to propose the toast to "Canada" and coupled with it the name of Dr. Dyde.

Rev. Mr. Burns in proposing the toast, referred to the pleasure he felt at being present. His subject, he said, was an extensive one. Canada was destined to become a great nation of the world. "God has given us a grand country," he remarked, and it depends on us what it is to be. It required leadership and work on the part of every loyal Canadian. The toast was honoured by the company heartily singing "the Maple Leaf Forever."

Dr. Dyde's Address.

In responding to the toast Dr. Dyde referred to the privilege, the local graduates had honoured him with, in inviting him to be present on such an occasion. In speaking of Canada, the learned gentleman took a retrospect of the Dominion back as far as confederation, referring to such men as Sir John A. Macdonald, Hon. Alex. Mackenzie and others, who, he said, did much in the building of the growing nation of Canada. Canada, at the present time, he remarked, was in state of transmission. It was passing from a colony into a self governing unit of the Empire. A few years ago some perso predicted that Canada would some day be the north part of the United tSates and some had said that it would be an independent nation. Both of these ideas, Dr. Dyde believed, were long since gone. "Our destiny should be," he stated, "to be strong in the Empire, a daughter in her mother's house. It behooves us to think nationally, imperially, and humanly. We should be an United Canada in an united empire for an united race."

Dr. Dyde, continuing, pointed out Canada's national obligation. "We are not an united Canada," he stated. "We are much more united than before confederation, but we cannot reach the union desired until every Canadian can see eye to eye with every man who calls himself by that name. French Canadians and Canadians who are English speaking should keep their differences subordinate but all should be together for Canada. Thos. D'Arcy McGee has said "God has made of one blood all nations on earth," and one of his cries was for "a Canadian Nationality." We must all liberalise, nationalise, and religiously, showing a true catholicity of spirit. We have not yet fulfilled the ambitions of our great predecessors of the early life of the Dominion. It is time to bury all differences.

It is the duty of Canadians to think imperially. Dr. Goldwin Smith in a newspaper article of October 23rd, had taken exception to our acting imperially. He said "We have been at peace for almost a century and no one has threatened the safety of our ports. There was no need of a navy for Canada." Who are we who have been at peace? Were we not at war in the Crimea and in South Africa, or is it true that we have outgrown our connection with the Motherland? That isn't British fair play. It is leaving the whole burden on the Mother's shoulders.

We should think humanly. What we desire is that the world should become a better place for us to live in. No nation nowadays, is doing its duty if it does not live for mankind. England is great and Canada should endeavour to live up to the ideals of true national greatness."

OUR ALMA MATER

The honour of proposing this toast fell to Rev. J. G. Potter, and in doing so he referred to the pleasure it gave him. For a great many years it had been a privilege for him to be connected with the late Principal who had always protested against intolerance. Men and women of all denominations were admitted to its halls of learning. Mr. Potter referred to the good work of Dr. Dyde in connection with the University. He lived an unselfish life for the students. The University was growing in influence and value. It was the first to open its doors to ladies. He asked all to rise and drink a toast to Queen's The College yell was heartily given and the toast duly honoured.

REV. PROF LAIRD

On rising to reply Rev. Prof Laird was given an ovation. He extended the greetings of Principal Gordon, who was unable to be present. Dr. Daig of Campbellford and the other graduates of that town also sent their best wishes. Speaking of Queen's he stated that the trustees had no reason to complain. Queen's had its grievances and sometimes its struggles, but the speaker believed it would come from these difficulties a stronger institution than ever. It was doing its part in making Canada a strong, free and united country. College men were growing nearer to each other and be referred to the genuine university spirit, when men throughout the land went down in their pockets to aid Qeen's. The University had a real, (fundamental part in making the country. It supplied the leaders and the ideas. There was a tendency for college men to hold aloof from public questions but they should make alive and effective what they had learned at University.

Queen's had taken the initiative in a number of important movements, its spirit always having been a national one. Last session forty per cent. of the students had come from West of Toronto. The University had now thirteen buildings and two new ones in the course of construction and forty-two Professors and lecturers. This session there were fifteen hundred students in attendance, an advance of eight hundred within the last nine years. The revenue and endowment had also been greatly increased.

"THE LADIES"

The toast to the ladies was proposed in a neat speech by Mr. G. W. Hofferd and responded to by Mr. R. W. Downey.

Those present then discussed organization.

A DISTINGUISHED ANNEXATIONIST.

There is no doubt of the loyalty of Peterborough people. Yet they listened with profit and delight last night to Canada's great and only Annexationist. Captain J. E. Bernier was listened to by a large audience in the Collegiate Institute auditorium, and perhaps some of them, while fully appreciating the interest of the lecturer, did not fully appreciate the full significance of the stirring story told. Capt. Bernier, while he may not have the blood of Jacques Cartier, the discoverer and annexer of Canada, has the spirit, and has discovered or annexed to Canada an area of country as large as that in whose name Jacques Cartier took possession of this country. Captain Bernier, last Dominion Day, took possession in the name of Canada of a territory in the far north as large as France. There is, Capt. Bernier thinks, great wealth in his find. There is evidence of minerals, of which the Yukon furnishes a precedent, and the waters of Baffin's Bay teem with fish, and there is an outlet there for the very profitable employment of Canadian enterprise. The fisheries of Canada have now an annual value of more than twenty-five millions of dollars, and if Captain Bernier has made important additions to this wealth he has done great things for Canada. Past experience has shown that there is hardly a square mile of Canadian territory, so far as exploration has gone, that has not yielded some positive form of wealth. If the Yukon is broadcast with gold why may not "Berniera" hold great wealth of minerals in its rocky breast, as it holds wealth of fish in its waters.

MORE GRANTS FOR VETERANS

At the parliament buildings in Ottawa yesterday, interest in the morning was divided between the first meeting of the Public Accounts Committee and the invasion of the House in force, by a deputation of Veterans of 1866 and 1870, the detachment, or rather, regiment, for it numbered about 250, marched, partly, and limped, partly, (rheumatism) to the House, with banners flying and bagpipes playing, and formed up in the Railway Committee room, when they charged Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who occupied the centre of the defensive position, supported on the right by Hon. Mr. Brodeur, and, on the left, by Sir Frederick Borden, with Hon. Sidney Fisher, in reserve. The ministers were bombarded with speeches by several veterans, employing varying tactics. While all the speakers claimed recognition for services rendered, one wing held that the recognition should take the form of a pension, to be provided for from the setting apart of a tract of Northwest land, the proceeds from whose sale should be funds to provide the pensions. Another suggestion was for a land grant subject to the usual settlement conditions. Sir Wilfrid, himself, a veteran, made a sympathetic reply, but regretted that the veterans had not united in a common demand—pension, or land, and he further hinted that there should be some discrimination between those who had seen actual service, and those who had merely shown their good will, among whom he gallantly classed himself. He had the greatest sympathy with the request of the veterans, which was receiving the attention of the Government. The possibility of meeting their views would give him the greatest pleasure. The chief obstacle in the way is the determined opposition of the western members, who, in their desire to see the West settled, fear the alienation of a large quantity of land that will not be subjected to immediate occupation and cultivation.

PERMANENCY.

In this column on Saturday last appeared an article under the above title, urging the importance of incorporating to element of permanency our municipal street work; and, as the time is approaching when the electors will choose their municipal rulers for another year the subject of such representation should receive especial attention.

It will not be seriously urged that the management of our streets for the last past year, or, for the matter of that, for any year in its past, has been such as to give anything like adequate value for the expenditure made or to secure, in a general way, results that will be of lasting character. It seems to be almost useless for the electors to attempt improvement by changing representatives; that would not probably do any good. The fault is not, altogether, or to any great extent, in the individuals elected; we have had almost yearly changes for a score of years, and every year we have had the same incompetents—as to special qualifications for their duties. The fault is in the no-system system which prevails, to the lack of definite policy, which is impossible, so long as successive adherence with the same brilliant crudity of ideas on street work and administration, are allowed to practise costly experimentation upon our streets and street work. The present Board of Works is not an administrative or executive body. It's a boy which demands and receives so much money which is spent in a hap-hazard, scratchy way, without any clear idea of what is to be accomplished or of the definite and proper object to be aimed at in spending the people's money.

On many of our streets enough money has been expended from time to time to cover them with dollar bills, but in spite of that they are no nearer what would be called permanent streets, than they were at the beginning—a good foundation has not even been provided in some cases, for really permanent and proper street construction. There is a complete absence of plan, no adequate preparation is made by way of surface, or other drainage, for beginning work. Then upon the improper foundation, so called, improper and unsuitable, friable, soft and shoddy material is placed—either gravel of mixed mud and miniature boulders, or macadam of crushed hard and soft stone, that will wear unevenly and speed-degenerate into an uneven driving surface.

To secure anything like approximately adequate value for the money spent upon our streets, and anything like lasting results, we must have a revolution. We have tried the old way and found it a bad way; costly and blind and injudicious confidence, surrendered our streets to street and bridge committees, and Boards of Works for years, with nothing of permanent results, except the perennial exactions of the tax roll. Does any one, for a moment, believe, that, if our Waterworks System had been left to such controlling powers as have successively had charge of our streets, we should have had the results that have followed their administration by a commission?

A commission for our streets is the remedy. Judging by our experience with the Waterworks Commission, it would be a vast improvement over the old way—it certainly could not be worse. In our desperation we are willing to adopt almost any expedient that gives any reasonable prospect of improvement. Placing our streets in charge of a commission, composed of capable men with business ideas, and giving them a free hand, we might expect a vast betterment.

The aldermen themselves recognize their powerlessness and have considered and discussed the commission idea. Why should it not be made an issue in the coming election? The electors themselves are much to blame for the condition that exists in relation to our streets. They take too little interest in the election of representatives. They vote for a man because he is a good fellow socially, or because he asks for their vote, or for some other reason, entirely unconnected with ability. They thus select to manage their public business, men whom they would not for a moment think of employing in any post regarding capacity and fitness, in their private business.

If a commission is selected or elected in the same way as the Water Works commission, only capable men will be likely to offer for selection, for responsibility will be so definitely fixed, son concentrated, that dereliction of duty, or lack of efficiency, will be more easily brought home than if divided amongst a dozen or more men.

The recent joint meeting of the City Council, Board of Trade, and leading citizens indicates an aroused public interest in city affairs. This awakened sprit should not be allowed to go to sleep agan. It should be directed to a more careful selection of representatives, who will not only be capable of giving wise and judicious attention to the selection of an industrial commissioner, but will carefully deal with a subject that cannot be neglected without continued injury to the interests of the city, and that subject is the devising of means to prevent further waste of money upon our streets, and secure the only condition that should be sought, permanently good results.

RESTRAINING GAMBLING.

So far as betting itself is concerned, I belive that the insanity which pervades a portion of the people of Canada on the question of bridge-whist is training people up to be racing touts and book-makers throughout this and other countries, and that the foundation of much of the trouble we shall have from betting in years to come is being laid in the homes of this Dominion in playing bridge-whist and other games for money.

These words, forming a part of the short speech of Hon. G. P. Graham, Minister of Railways and Canals in the debate on the bill of Mr. Miller, of South Grey, to amend the criminal code are a sample expression of the sentiments of others. Ever since the session opened there has been a flood of petitions pouring in, upon which Mr. Miller's bill, in his own words, "to utterly, entirely and completely suppress and prevent gamblin gon race tracks, floated into notice on Thursday. For the space of nearly six hours members talked on the subject and the words of Mr. Graham quoted above are substantially the sentiments expressed by many of the speakers, whether in favour of or opposed to the bill. There was a general agreement of opinion that the evil of race track gambling was a proper subject of restrictive and prohibitory legislation, as there was that there were other forms of gambling—bridge-whist being specially and mercilessly distinguished—which if they did not form the subjects of such legislation could very properly do so. Not only Mr. Graham, but nearly all of twelve or fifteen members who spoke upon the subject, included condemnation of the evils of bridge-whist and other forms of gambling, besides that of the race track, in their condemnation. It wa salso the feeling of the house that, as the proposed legislation affected vested interests concerned in improving the horse flesh of the country and that, as the bill was an evident response to one shade of public opinion, expressed in the petitions which had been so numerously presented, an opportunity should be afforded to hear the representatives of these interests. The bill was therefor referred to a special committee, composed of Messrs. Miller, McColl, (Northumberland), Monk, Blain, Sinclair, Stratton, Martin. The reference of the bill to a special committee, will permit of the presentation of the arguments of all shades of opinion as to the merits or the demerits of the bill. The numerous petitions presented against race track gambling show that there is a powerful volume of public opinion enlisted in the effort to prevent or minimise the evil and it is probable that the house will yield to the apparently overwhelming weight of public opinion behind the bill and make it law. As mirrors of public opinion parliamentary representatives can hardly do otherwise.

MONEY WELL SPENT.

The following article from the Toronto News of November 29th is conclusive evidence of the wise policy of the Mowat and Ross Governments in biulding up and developing the Ontario Agricultural College. The Liberal Governments of Ontario have always appreciated the great benefit that a properly constituted Agricultural College would be to the farmers of Ontario, and at last it is being appreciated by the Conservative party that found fault with it in Ontario and that endeavoured to hamper the Government from time to time in its efforts. There is no Educational Institution that is of more value to Ontario than the Agricultural College, and the farmers of Ontario fully appreciate what has been done in this direction and the good that has resulted from the wise policy of the Liberal Party in the building up and development of the Agricultural interests of Ontario. The News says:

"No public money is more profitably spent than are the appropriations devoted to the maintenance of the Ontario Agricultural College and its activities throughout the Province. The institution is a potent factor in promoting the wealth and prosperity of the entire community. For that reason city and country alike can only approve of any reasonable liberality which the Government may deem fit to exercise towards it. The College is manned by an enthusiastic staff of professors and lecturers, many of whom must labour not so much for the salaries they receive as for sheer love of their work. They are in the fortunate position, not enjoyed by many people of labouring consciously for the advancement of a whole Province, and of seeing a constant accumulation of concrete results accruing from their efforts.

It has been said before that the College brings its powerful influence to bear upon the agricultural community in various ways and through various channels. It receives the lad used to farm life, inspires him with the inspiration of a fresh knowledge of better methods, and sends him back home capable of getting more money and more happiness out of the old homestead, and of leavening the whole neighbourhood with his own advanced ideas. Those farmers' sons who have not places of their own to which to return often find employment nowadays as the well paid managers of farms belonging to city men with a leaning twards rural life for part of the year. Journalism is another available field for graduates of the College. Most of the agricultural newspapers throughout the Dominion, as well as the agricultural departments of metropolitan journals, are manned by boys from the Guelph farm.

When the Dominion Government and the various Provincial Governments want men to fill responsible posts in their Departments of Agriculture, they look about for Guelph College graduates. At any rate, these departments are largely manned to-day by these men who act as Deputy Ministers, fruit inspectors, seed inspectors, cheese inspectors, butter inspectors and in other capacities. Every season the college authorities select its brightest men, and train them for service as expert officials of Canadian and foreign Governments. Many important posts in the United States are held by Guelph men, but it is hoped that, with the increased agricultural development now going on all over the Dominion, it will be possible to keep more of the graduates at home to help build up their own country. We cannot place an export embargo upon them, but they are of much more value to the nation than even pulp wood.

Still another fruitful and enjoyable field for work is found in the agricultural agencies which the Ontario Government is locating in different parts of the Province. Already at High School centres in eleven counties graduates of the College have been established. They give agricultural instruction in the town, and go from farm to farm lending the tillers of the soil the assistance of their expert advice as regards their individual problems. The work of most of these men has so increased that they are being furnished with one or more assistants, also drawn from the College. The College educates the farmers' son, while the College farm and its various agencies tell the farmer himself on the "back fifty" just what returns he may expect by adopting specified methods. The fact that from thirty thousand to forty thousand people visit the institution every year indicates that the work is appreciated.

The average yield of wheat per acre throughout Ontario is twenty-two bushels, while the best farms produce forty-five bushels. The average Ontario cow gives three thousand pounds of milk per annum, and there is one on the College farm with 20,778 pounds to her credit. The everyday hen lays ninety eggs a year, and the College has some that produce upwards of two hundred. In each case the maximum named may be a counsel of perfection, but certainly there is room for improvement between the average and the maximum. The College shows the road to such improvement.

WARDEN SCOTT PRESENTED WITH ADDRESS BY COUNCIL

Happy Event Marked the Conclusion of Last Session of 1909—His Ability and Geniality Appreciated by the Members.

AN APPROPRIATE REPLY

One of the pleasant features of the concluding hours of the County Council's session to-day was an address read by Mr. Frank Moher, of Douro, and signed by all the members of the Council to Warden Scott. It was a complete surprise and was the more festitious on account of the genuine cordiality and sincerity with which it was supported. The Warden was asked to vacate the chair and Reeve Knox of Havelock, took his place. Mr. Moher then read the following address:

Mr. R. N. Scott, Warden of Peterborough County and Reeve of Smith—

Dear Sir,—To-day marks the close of the last session of the County Council of Peterborough for 1909. Only a few days will elapse before you will retire from the honoured position of Warden of the County, and as you have announced, from the arena of municipal politics. It is with regret that we view these things and with pleasure that we review the work of the past year. Under your able leadership harmony has prevailed in the Council. We desire to place on record our appreciation of the unfailing courtesy with which you have treated each one of us during the year and of the painstaking manner in which you have looked after the work entrusted to your care. You have rendered the county excellent service during the past year and also during other years in which you have been a member of the County Council. We can assure you, sir, that the good work you have done while a member of the municipal Council of the township of Smith and of the County Council of Peterborough is appreciated by the ratepayers who so often have placed trust in you.

We trust that you will long be spared to enjoy the best in the land, and hope that in the near future we may see you occupying higher offices than those you have so ably filled in the past.

Warden's Reply.

Warden Scott made an appropriate reply, thanking the members for the kindness that prompted the address and for the sentiment it expressed. He spoke of the pleasure it had given him to preside in the chair and re regretted the fact that the year's work was concluded so harmonious had everything been. The Warden dwelt briefly upon Council affairs and of the circumstances that will be remembered longest.

ANOTHER LETTER FROM MR. LASTAR

This letter and any others that may follow, under the signature of Mr. Lastar, are independent of any other party or parties, and are paid for by him for their insertion.

To the Editor of The Examiner:

After seeing that the liberal critic got busy, and has not time to inspect my manuscripts, and is waiting until pay day to get the necessary $25 for the Children's Aid. Or is he like the rest of the local option workers, who are great in speech and small in deed So I will not take the trouble to wait for him, but will write more reasons why local option should not be carried in Peterborough. I have made reference in my last letters to those workers who are working for local option, if they would adopt the same systems as the T.A.S. have done, they would have no necessity of passing the local option here. Now let us see the difference of the two ways. Which is best to limit drunkeness here in Peterborough. We will take the T.A.S. first. As a matter of fact, if a person has the toothache, and if he wants to cure it, the best way is to take it out at the root. It would be no good, if he breaks the tooth off, and leaves the root; but the best way is to take out the root, and the pain will stop. In my opinion this is the way the T.A.S. are doing, in saving men from drinking, and put him directly on a better standing, both morally and financially. The way they are doing, you may all know. In the first place when they see a man suffering from drinking, or if his family is in distress, they visit him, and induce him to join the T.A.S. Once he has made up his mind to join them, they make him take a pledge to leave drink alone, and no matter how many hotels are in his neighbourhood, he will not go near them. And what is more important, he will not take any liquor home, and drink it there. That is where the real temptation is, and more danger for the children. In doing this, they are taking the matter by the root, and settling the drinking question, without any inconvenience to anyone. I agree with them for that reason, that they are saving not only the children from drinking, but their fathers also. Because if the father doesn't drink, he will naturally bring the children up in the same way. But I do not agree with the Rev. Mr. Smith, of Toronto Junction, who in his address said: "By all means, if anybody is bound to drink, and cannot get it in the open bar, let him take it home, and drink himself to death." That is where I oppose him. I do not want any man, even a father of a family, who has to support them, to get dead drunk. If there is any saving to be done, it is the first duty to save that man, and they should see that he does not drink himself to death. If they cannot make him take a pledge not to touch any more drink; force him by putting him on the black list. But above anything, do not give them the opportunity to take it to his home. And if they go at it in this way to save a man from drinking, they will have no necessity to cry, "Save the boys," as they will naturally be educated and brought up from their childhood, to look with contempt at a saloon. We have proof right here in our city, where fathers have joined the T.A.S. years ago, the children of those men are absolutely abstaining from any intoxicating drinks, whatever. Now some of you will say, that would be good, if you could just get them to join such a society at the T.A.S. You can not easily bring a drunkard to reason, once he is one. But this I will answer you, that with proper ways and with a proper man, such as they have in the T.A.S., you can induce any drunkard to become a law abiding and sober man. Now let us see what the T.A.S. do, and what they have accomplished in avoiding drunkeness. In the ten years since it has been founded, you will find that out of a population of 4,000 Catholics where there are about 1500 men, the T.A.S. has a membership of 1000 members. Just think of it—out of 1,500 men, they have 1,000 of them who are not touching liquor nor bringing any intoxicating drink to their houses; and I must congratulate them on their grand and noble work, by teaching and educating the children in the same moral way; by not giving the children the temptation of having intoxicating liquors in ther homes..

Every one of us knows how many families were absolutely on the edge of ruin, when those noble men stepped in, and have saved them. Why should you bring here some outside professional speakers, who are strangers to us, and who don't know the conditions of the city; but tell us some sad stories, and in many cases misrepresented, who do not care for the inhabitants of Peterborough, so long as they get their pay. And what do they tell you. They only compare you with the meanest and most disgraceful people and places; and you listen to them because you think they are doing the work of God. Many preachers have long preachers' coats, but are full of dark spots. If they would clean themselves of the dark spots, they would have enough to do, and let local option alone. You have here in the city comparisons, if you would only follow them. I have beeen told by many parties tha tthe T.A.S. is only for Catholics. If so, why should not the Methodists, Presbyterians, Baptists and the others make one for themselves, if they do not want to join the T.A.S. Why should you not be able to reform men from drinking, as they have done. If out of the same number of men you could get as many members, you would be able to bring thre-quarters o fthe city to join you, and then there would not be any necessity for so many hotels. And if there were no patrons to patronize them, they would have to close, and there would only be those that were absolutely necessary for the travelling public. Some canvassers are trying to induce people to vote for local option by saying that Catholics are in favour of the hotels because the hotel keepers are Catholics, and therefore they are supporting them. If anyone tells you anything like this, tell them it is not the truth. Out of 23 men who are in the liquor business here, there are only 8 Catholics; and even if they should have been all Catholics, they would not be in favour of the hotels, if they did not think they were harmless.. If you would only do as the T.A.S., and not visit the hotels when you want a drink.

Now let us see the other side of the story. If local option should pass. What benefit would we get from it. We have been shown, and told only one side of the story. They will all acknowledge that by passing local option they only succeed in limiting to a certain extent the drunkenness. They have not told you that by closing the open bars, the numbers of which at the present time is 19, that there will likely be 119 private bars where young men and boys will be able to get liquor. That every private boarding house will be tempted to have a bottle on the quiet. You are not told how poor wmen and girls are not told how poor women and girls are ofroed by shrd times, at first to sell liquor on the sly, and later to lead immoral lives. You do not find women and girls serving liquor in the open bar. I was informed, that at a short distance from Peterborough where local option is now in force, that a mother and two daughters, who made an honest living by washing before local option carried, now have a quiet business for themselves by selling liquor, and leading immoral lives. They have not told you that where men were in the habit of going to the bar and taking one drink before, after the bars are closed have bottles and barrels in their homes, and instead of taking one drink, is drinking so long as he can stand on his legs. The wife and children see it at first with contempt, and then when they are getting used to it, the wife starts to steal it from the husband and the child seeing that the mother is taking it on the sly, begins also to steal a bottle. Is this saving the children. It is bringing them not only to drunkenness but to theft. They have not told you what Recorder Weldon, of Portland, said. It reads this way. "There are at least 40 men and women, who are brought before this court, time and again for intoxication. Think of it, 400 inhabitants of a city from which the liquor traffic is supposed to have been banished years ago. During the four years up to Jan 1st, 1907, in Portland liquors were sold on 75 streets and alleys at 445 different places and 832 different persons were brought into court for violation of the liquor law." They have not told you that the whole state of Alabama, after having an experience with local option for some years, only last week voted on the local option bill again, and defeated it with 15,000 of a majority. Why? Because they were disgusted with the conditions of local option. Because they have found out there is more immorality and drunkenness when the bars were closed, than when they are under the supervision of the auothorities. Neither have they told you that in many local option towns, out of dozens of honest citizens, they have made, law-breakers, and perjurers that are filling the prisons by selling illegal liquor. Why should you lead these people to such a temptation. You claim you want to save the poor, and relieve distress, and here you are trying to tempt them to break the law, and at a time when you have absolute proof, that if you should originate another T.A.S., which has been proven such a success, you would also succeed.

Now I want every reader of this letter to consider those two ways. You must come to the conclusion that by going the proper way about it, as the T.A.S. are doing, it is a crime for us to bring local option in Peterborough. I have seen in this morning's paper in their literature, what the Catholic authorities are saying about the drinking question. If you just compare them with mine, you will find that they are expressing the same opinion as I do. That they are all against drinking; but not against the hotels. But to educate and induce the people to leave drinking altogether.

B. LASTAR.

You Have Possibilities For a Good Figure Under Your Fat

From 30 years onward people grow fatter. So many do so it seems the natural thing. Instead of that, getting fat is a bad sign. From that moment one's tissues are going to get gradually weaker.

It is easy to correct the trouble, however. One teaspoonful after meals and at bedtime of the following pleasant mixture: ½ oz. Marmola, ¾ oz. Fluid Extract Cascara Aromatic and 4¾ oz. Peppermint Water will put back into your stomach that youthful energy which prevented you getting fat before 30. The old figure is still there under your fat, remember. Dig it out with this harmless receipt. It will take out 12 to 14 ounces a day without any help from exercise or diet.

SONS OF ENGLAND BANQUET WAS SUCCESSFUL EVENT

Past Supreme President Boxall of Lindsay Delivered an Effective Address.

WAS LARGE ATTENDANCE

"I believe in Women's Suffrage. If every woman had a right to vote she would use that right intelligently and well. But I have no sympathy with some of the tactics used by the women in England to gain their point. A woman has no more right to be a rowdy than has a man and her first duty is to see that she is a lady. She must not forget her sex."

The above remarks were features of the address given by Past Supreme President Jas. Boxall of Lindsay at the annual banquet of Lansdowne Lodge, Sons of England, held last evening in the S.O.E. Hall and one of the most successful affairs of its kind held under the auspices of the Lodge. It took the form of a supper followed by a programme of which Mr. Boxall's address was one of the principal items. There was a large attendance and the event was marked by a feeling of good fellowship that made the evening a pleasant one for everybody including the ladies, the fair sex being well represented.

Messrs. Coleman Brothers were the caterers for the occasion and they succeeded admirably in the supper arrangements, the result being a most appetizing repast that was done ample justice to by the gathering. The only toast honoured during the supper was one to the King which was honoured in hearty manner by the singing of the National Anthem.

During the supper an attractive programme of music was provided by Mr. Halpany's orchestra, whose delightful playing added much to the enjoyment of the guests.

Past Supreme President Boxall was chairman during the entertainment that followed and his opening address proved very interesting. He expressed his pleasure at once more being with Lansdowne Lodge, which next to his home Lodge in Old England was dearest to his heart and was glad to welcome the President and other officers of Lady Lansdowne Lodge.

Speaking of fraternal Societies, Mr. Boxall stated emphatically that he believed that every young man should be associated with a fraternal society just as he should be connected with a Christian church. The two worked together. It was the duty of every young man to make provision for those whome he loved as he journeyed through life and the fraternal Society offered him a means to do this at comparatively low cost. The Sons of England afforded its members the cheapest possible insurance from $250 up to $1,000. During the year the S.O.E. had paid out for children between the ages of 5 and 15 years $8,182, to husbands whose wives had died $63,535 and to wives of deceased members $77,982. In addition there were sick benefits for the members. The officers of the Society ruled rather by the spirit than by the letter of the law.

Mr. Boxall was warmly applauded as he concluded his remarks.

The remainder of the programme was as follows:—

Instrumental Solo — Mr. Frank Clarke.
Selection—Halpany Orchestra.
Recitation—Mr. J. Johns.
Selection—Halpany Orchestra.
Address—Rev. W. C. Riddiford.
Instrumental Solo — Mr. Frank Clarke.
Selection—Halpany Orchestra.
Recitation—Mr. Johns.
Selection — Halpany Orchestra.

The programme was a most enjoyable one and those taking part were warmly received by the audience.

The event was a great success and the committee whic hhad the affair in charge are to be congratulated.

HE KNOWS FROM HIS EXPERIENCE

That Dodd's Kidney Pills Will Cure Bright's Disease.

Postmaster Cote Tells How the Great Canadian Kidney Remedy Cured Him After Doctors Had Given Him Up.

Le Petit Bois Franc, Temiscouta Co., Que., Dec. 3.—(Special.—Mr. Charles Côte, postmaster here, is firmly convinced that Dodd's Kidney Pills will cure Bright's Disease or any other disease of the Kidneys. He knows from his own experience. Hear what he says:

"For over four years I was troubled with Backache, Rheumatism and lack of ambition ,and my urine was of a dark, unnatural colour. I was attended by three doctors who did me no good. The last one told me it was only a waste of money to try anything else as I could not live more than a year at the outside.

"At the verge of death I decided to give Dodd's Kidney Pills a trial. I used eighteen boxes and to-day my Rheumatism, Backache and Headache are gone. My urine is like that of a child. I feel I owe my life to Dodd's Kidney Pills."

Postmaster Cote had all the symptoms of Bright's Disease. The doctors evidently knew he had Bright's Disease—the most deadly form of Kidney Disease. Dodd's Kidney Pills cured him. They will cure any form of Kidney Disease.

LOCAL SOCIETY HONOURED

A large audience at the Collegiate Institute Assembly Hall last night accompanied the dauntless Captain Bernier over the routes covered by him in his three journeys into the comparatively unknown regions off Canada's north eastern shores. They weathered the stormy seas to the north of the treacherous straits of Belle Isle, gazed in wonder at the icebergs as they passed in the stout little seafarer ,the "Arctic," continued onward into the land of the Esquimaux, and witnessed Captain Bernier placing the Union Jack upon the islands of the north sea, claiming them for Canada. The lecture was illustrated by excellent stereopticon views, which told more emphatically than mere words could convey of the hardships and trials that await the explorer who braves a trip into the territory where the winters are long and cold and drear.

Captain Bernier comes of a family that for generations have been sea men and the fame he has achieved in his work for the Canadian Government will stand out in the history of this country for his intrepid zeal.

The Peterborough branch of the Royal Astronomical Society, under whose auspices the lecture was given, must feel honoured by the fact that it was able to secure for its members and the citizens in general the services of Captain Bernier for his interesting account of the voyages he has safely and creditably accomplished.

The Assembly Hall of the Collegiate Institute was well filled with an audience that showed its appreciation of the Captain's work. Rev. Dr. Marsh, who for years has been his intimate friend, called the meeting to order.

In opening the exercises, Rev. Dr. Marsh, local president of the Royal Astronomical Society of Canada, complimented those present upon having the opportunity of hearing Captain Bernier. A great many places have requested him to lecture, but he refused, owing to the fact that he will be very busy in preparing his reports to the Government. Dr. Marsh intimated that the Captain had his first experience at sea when a child of two years, being with his father at Sebastopool. At the age of 12 he went to sea as a common seaman, and at the age of 19 he became master of the ship. He has been a captain during the past forty years and six months. During all this time he has never been complained of by any company he served. Dr. Marsh then called upon Mayor Rush to give the city's welcome to the visitor.

Mayor Rush's Address.

His Worship Mayor Rush extended Peterborough's welcome to Captain Bernier in the following words:

It gives me great pleasure to join with you to-night in welcoming Capt. Bernier to Peterborough. We have read of the intreped explorations made by the gallant captain with great interest. His work has been of great advantage to Canada in locating territory of the Dominion in the far and frozen north, and in taking possession of this territory for Canada and for the Empire he has, at the great risk that all explorers in that region must run, done good work for his country. Such work is also of benefit to the world, for the scientific knowledge thus gained and made konwn adds to the general fund of information and advances the work of scientists and of civilisation. We have both been given as much knowledge of Capt. Bernier's exploits as we would like to have. The courage of one who faces the frosen north, and penetrates that inhospitable region and shuts himself off from the rest of the world for long periods at a time meeting and overcoming all the dangers and horrors of such an undertaking, merits and receives our admiration, and when the results accomplished are such as to be of great practical value, our enthusiasm is aroused and we desire to learn more. It is indeed a privilege that we will have to-night, in hearing from Capt. Bernier himself a description of the regions in the distant north and of his voyage to and travels in that land of perpetual ice. We are pleased to have this opportunity of meeting him and hearing him, and heartily welcome him to our city.

Mr. Stratton's Remarks.

Mr. Stratton stated that it gave him great pleasure to preside at a meeting of the Astronomical Society under any circumstances, but the pleasure was greater when the gathering was to be addressed by a gentleman who may be described as the "Pioneer Arctic Explorer of Canada."

Captain Bernier did not need any introduction to a Canadian audience, as he was Canada's first Arctic Explorer. He had his eye on the North Pole, and, although he did not reach it, he did something of far greater material benefit to Canada. The North Pole was only a spot, and though of great scientific value, it was of no commercial value, except to alleged discoverers who make their money out of the contradcitory stories told to the public. Captain Bernier did the best thing next to discovering the North Pole; he took possession of it, and it was to him that Canada owes the ownership of the Pole and the adjacent continental sweep of country to the south of it.

Captain Bernier was more honoured than most men, because he had a monument erected to him, while he is still living. In the vestibule of the Parliamentary Library, Ottawa, was placed a mural tablet, setting forth that it is placed

"To commemorate the taking possession for the Dominion of Canada of the whole Arctic Archipelago, from Longitude 60, West, to Longitude 141, West, up to Latitude 90, North."

That this was how Commander Bernier of the Canadian Government Steamer "Arctic" celebrated Dominion Day, 1909.

Mr. Stratton stated that it might be of interest to know ha in he same vestibule, on the opposite side, was another tablet attached to the wall:

"In honour of the men by whose enterprise, courage and skill the "Royal William," the first vessel to cross the Atlantic by steam power, was wholly constructed in Canada and navigated to England in 1833, the pioneer of those mighty fleets of ocean steamers, by which passengers and merchandise of all nations are now conveyed on every sea throughout the world."

Which showed that to Canada belonged the honour of being the pioneer of the tremendous steam fleets of the world, as well as the pioneer of the late achievements represented by the late voyage of Captain Bernier. Captain Bernier stated that the Arctic region contained many valuable fisheries, and he had no doubt but that Greenland would yet be a part of the Dominion. The speaker of the evening had brought with him many records from former Pole seekers who had gone before, some of whom had lost their lives in the bleak north. He knew the Captain's address would be interesting and profitable. He had great pleasure in introducing Captain Bernier.

The Arctic Sets Sail.

Before the Arctic set sail pictures of Sir Wilfred Laurier, Mr. R. L. Borden, Hon. Mr. Brodeur were thrown on the canvas. To the latter Captain Bernier stated that he owed a debt of gratitude for the privilege he had allowed him on his trips. Government orders had to be obeyed to the letter but the Captain had been given certain latitude on account of the nature of his journeys. The steamer Arctic was built for German Government for a dash to the South Pole at a cost of $200,000 and an additional $50,000 for its equipment. Its hull was so constructed that the ice could not squeese it and in spite of the rough seas through which it had sailed it was still in good condition. Canada possesses in the Arctic one of the strongest vessels in the world and in every respect it is admirably adapted for trips through polar seas.

Captain Bernier started on his first cruise in September of 1904. He had not participated in an attempt to find the North Pole. He had fixed orders from the Government and he did not consider the idea of going outside of them. In the course of his remarks he explained that years ago, English and Scotch explorers, among them being the celebrated Franklin who sacrificed his life in an endeavour to discover a northwest passage had found new islands and mainlands but they had never been properly claimed. Records had been left of the visits of these men and it was in their footsteps that Captain Bernier followed and claimed these and other territories for Canada. In his first trip he took a number of the Royal North West Mounted Police to a point on Hudson Strait where a post was established. The strait is navigable during four months in the year and Captain Bernier pointed out a route from Hudson Bay that might yet be utilised as a possible commercial highway to Europe.

The Esqimaux.

An interesting feature of the lecture was the Captain's references to the natives of the North land. The Esquimaux are nappy in spite of the cold weather which they must endure during the prolonged winters. Their houses of ice are very warm and one of them can be built in an hour. Capt. Bernier stated that he could buy one of them for a needle. From the views of them he emphasised the racial characteristics of these people explaining that they appeared to be of Japanese or Chinese origin. Their eyes and cheek bones were similar to those of the Oriental people and the patterns of their dresses were practically identical with those of the races in the east. As a people they possessed some admirable qualities. They are happy, contented and in his dealings with them he had always found them honest. An Esquimau's pride is to possess a gun. with which he could hunt like a white man.

Among the explorers that Captain Bernier eulogized were Sir John Franklin and Raol Amunsden, the later a Norwegian. The former had attempted to find the North West passage but had failed when about ninety miles from the goal he had endured so much to reach. Captain Bernier dwelt upon the abundance of fish that teem the rivers of the north and the great possibilities afforded to form a paying industry from these fisheries. The patrolling of the Canadian waters for whalers and seal hunters was one of the duties in connection with the Captain's trips. Sealers had to pay for the privileges they enjoyed and the stories Captain Bernier told in this connection were most amusing. He had made good friends with the Esquimaux who gave him a great deal of information thereby enabling him to know before he had visited their vessels, the extent of their work. He also gained information of the routes they had taken and in many respects the natives gave him valuable assistance.

His second trip was begun in the spring of 1906 and was equally successful in regard to the acquiring of new possessions for Canada. These he enumerated and when he would tell of the planting of the Union Jack on Baffin's land, Griffith's island and the other lands his audience demonstrated their pleasure by applauding him.

During his three trips the whole of the northern archipelago had been annexed by him as the result of this trip, a territory of not less than 500,000 square miles in extent. He had left a slab on Melville Island announcing the formal taking possession of the whole of this archipelago. Nobody could dispute it, because Canada had the title deeds. He had brought them. Neither Peary nor Cook had accomplished so much. It is true they got to the North Pole, or they say they did. They got to the North Pole, but the North Pole was an invisible point, the luxury of which Canada had not yet been able to afford.

"When I told Sir Wilfrid Laurier that I would like to find the Pole just for the honour of the thing, Sir Wilfrid looked at me, and smiling said. We can't afford the luxury."

During his address Captain Bernier displayed a cheerful disposition that is a necessary essential to a north sea voyage. He said he was the happiest man in the world because he had plenty of work. "Only people who work are happy," he said. Captain Bernier is one of those men who does not know despair. The north can be conquered only by dauntless spirits that will not countenance defeat.

At the conclusion of the address a vote of thanks was tendered Captain Bernier on motion of Mr. D. Hughes-Charles and Rev. Dr. Marsh, and was conveyed to him by the chairman, Hon. Mr. Stratton. He replied expressing his appreciation of the sentiments of the assembly.

And any woman reader of the Examiner can have attractive and lustrous hair in a few days' time by using this great hair rejuvenator, Parisian Sage.

SALE OF WORK

The Girls of the Margaret Cox Home Will Conduct one on December 9th.

For some months past the girls residing at the "Margaret Cox Home," and many of these placed out in situations in various parts of Ontario, have been busy in their spare time with their needles, hoping that the dainty tray-cloths, centre-pieces, cushions, tea-cosies, and many attractive novelties their hands have fashioned, will, when sold, bring in a sufficient sum to buy the new organ for their Assembly Hall, which has been talked of for many years. The girls greatly enjoy the singing at their daily services, and on Sunday, but of late this has had to be without an instrument. His Worship, the Mayor, has kindly consented to perform the opening ceremony, and all friends who can spare time to come up, will be very welcome. The sale will take place in the Assembly Hall in the new wing recently added to the building by the Hon. Geo. A. Cox. From 3 p.m. to 10 p.m.

GENERALLY SPEAKING

By F. M. D.

Danger of Football.

There is a tremendous amount of rubbish written every season on the above subject. Because here and there some unfortunate loses his life or limb, an outcry is raised and frenzied fathers and mothers demand an immediate and radical change in the rules, or that the game shall be abolished altogether. Prize-fighters, even, in order to gain a little bit of public sympathy, compare their own pursuit with football much to the detriment of the latter, and thus manage to throw a little additional obloquy on the sport. But all the objections are very senseless. They are senseless, because their projectors go beyond all bounds in their denunciations of the sport; and senseless also because no consideration is taken of the fact that in almost every branch of sport that calls for muscular energy and endurance, as much danger to life and limb exists as in football. Shooting, swimming, canoeing, yachting, yearly claim far more victims than this much maligned game. Whoever thinks of raising a voice in protest against any of these, or against motoring, or riding? The whole thing is an absurdity. Reform may be needed, but not abolishment. Physical perfection can only be brought out in one way, and that is by physical exercise, and we all have different tastes in the matter of exercise.

The Licensing of Chauffeurs.

Police Commissioner Baker, of New York, looks upon chauffeurs as being in a class by themselves, and in need of special legislation to control their occupation. He suggests that as many an accident has occurred which was undoubtedly owing to loss of nerve on the part of the driver it should be compulsory on all chauffeurs to be abstainers from smoking. He thinks that cigarette smoking, especially, causes an appreciable loss of will power in the minds of its votaries.

Seeing that motoring is getting to be not the luxurious amusement of the rich alone, but also of the general public, it seems quite within the bounds of reason that some set rule should be made in regard to the licensing of chauffeurs. At present, any body is entitled to drive a motor car along our highways, whether he is mentally fitted for the task or not. Railway corporations see to it that their employees are temperance men: if they are not, they are soon sent about their business. In fact, throughout the commercial world, the responsible positions are preferentially, almost everywhere given to men who are abstainers from liquor. It stands to reason, therefore, that a position needing extra caution, extra nerve power in the safeguarding of human life, should be entrusted only to a man who can be relied upon to have his wits always about him. So far as smoking is concerned, that is a matter for physicians to decide, but the systematic licensing of chauffeurs, and a law penalizing the employer of any chauffeur who is addicted to known nerve-racking habits of any sort, cannot be put too soon on our statute books.

Farm Help.

Farmers have been experiencing difficulty this season as well as in former ones, in the matter of obtaining hands for their harvest work. In some quarters we have heard of men expressing surprise at the dearth of help. If the tales that percolate through various channels, and in many cases, get printed in English periodicals are true, the reason is not far to seek. Not all farmers are hard on their men by any means, but a sufficient number of them are to give the impressions that the farmer's lot is not only a hard one physically, but in almost every other way. When we read of men employing immigrants and after keeping them a month or so, giving them a dollar as a fair wage for their work, it makes one's indignation rise. Such men are no help to their calling. It is men of this calibre who drive their sons to the West and to the towns and cities of the Dominion, and who make the cry, "Back to the land" grow more insistently clamorous each succeeding year.

Forget and Forgive.

This is a very nice adage, but voices an ideal which is about as unapproachable as the life and example of the Saviour. It occurs in "King Lear," Act IV., Scene VII., and sums up one of the greatest and most difficult lessons of Christianity. Forgiving may, perhaps be passably easy to a broadminded and benevolent man or woman, but how about the forgetting? The late W. E. Norris put the matter in a nutshell when he said "We may forgive and we may forget, but we can never forget that we have forgiven." Or, we may forgive and yet hope that God may not forget; we will withhold our vengeance, trusting that in the hands of the Almighty it will find a more skilful marksman, like Lord Herbert of Cherbury. "I never need revenge" said that amiable Christian "as leaving it always to God, who the less I punish mine enemies, will inflict so much the more punishment on them." To a sane being there can be no such thing as absolute forgetting. The thing may be drawn out and absolute forgiveness granted to the perpetrator of the injury, but somehow or other an indefinable feeling of discomfort remains. The moral for us all is obvious.

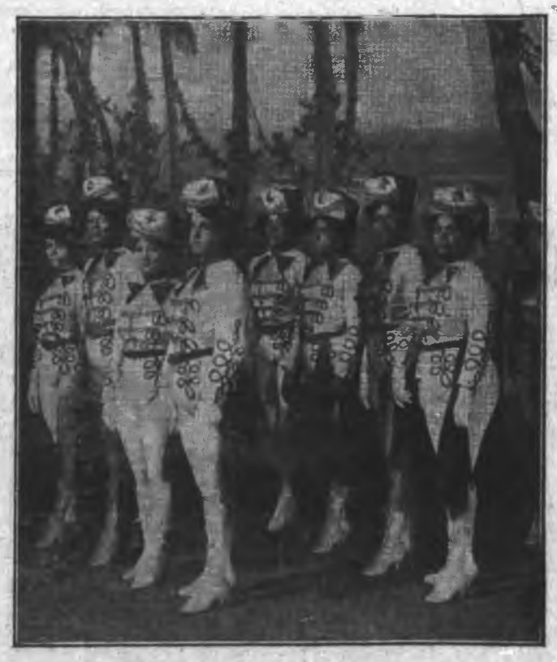
THE MYSTERIOUS NERVES

How like electricity is the mysterious nerve force which courses through the body, controlling the movement of every muscle and the working of every organ. The secret of keeping the marvellous nervous system in health and vigour is found in the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, the great blood builder and nerve restorative.

WAS A SUCCESS

Bazaar and Sale of Work at George Street Methodist Church Largely Attended.

The annual bazaar and sale of work in connection with the George St. Methodist Church Mission Band yesterday afternoon and evening was a most gratifying success, the financial results being all that was expected. The different booths, at which there were a variety of pretty and useful articles, eminently suited to Christmas giving were well patronized and in some cases the stock in trade was nearly all disposed of before the evening was brought to a close. There was a large attendance and many of those present partook of the dainty supper that was served. During the evening a number of young ladies gave instrumental selections on the piano that were much appreciated. The president of the Mission Band, Miss Aggie Davis, and the other officers, are to be congratulated upon the success of their efforts.



Scene from "The Smart Set" which comes to the "Grand" next Thursday, December 9, in the Musical Comedy, "His Honor the Barber," headed by the premier of Colored Comedians, S. H. Dudley. Plan opens Tuesday morning.

HISTORY OF LOCAL GROWTH OF THE SALVATION ARMY

Some Historical Facts in Connection With the Re-opening of the Citadel This Evening---Work Was Inaugurated in Peterborough Twenty-seven Years Ago---Corps is Now Very Strong.

The Salvation Army Citadel which has been closed for a period of over four months undergoing extensive repairs will be formally opened this evening when a big meeting will be held at which some prominent members of the Headquarters Staff will be present. Hon. J. R. Strattion occupy the chair and the speakers will include Lieut. Col. Gaskins, Field Secretary for Canada and Newfoundland, Brigadier R. Hargraves, Divisional officer for Eastern Ontario and Quebec and Capt. S. A. Church, editor of the Salvation Army Sunday School publication, 'The Young Soldier."

At a cost of $4,000 the citadel has been greatly altered and improved, in order to make better provision for the Sunday School department. In the basement fifteen class rooms have been constructed where the different classes may meet and study the lesson afterwards reassembling in the auditorium downstairs. The hall was formerly situated in the basement but will now have a room upstairs in the part of the building formerly used as a residence for the commanding officer. The residential portion has been torn away and a room provided for the band while the alteration has also increased the size of the main auditorium. The improvements throughout have been complete and extensive and great credit is due the architect, Capt. Stitt, of the Headquarters Staff, Toronto, who prepared the plans and the contractor, S. True, a member of the local corps who has done his work thoroughly and well. The painting was done by Mr. J. J. Shadgett, the furnace and ceiling supplied by Mr. Adam Hall, the lighting by Alexander and Miller, and the stonework and masonry done by Mr. Hyward, all of whom have done creditable work.

HISTORY OF THE ARMY

In view of the re-opening ceremonies some historical references to the growth of the Salvation Army in Peterborough may be of more than usual interest to Examiner readers. The Peterborough branch of the Salvation Army had its inception some twenty seven years ago and naturally was but a very small organisation at the start. Capt. Smith was the first officer in command of this Division and she started the work here with but a handful of faithful followers whose efforts were often scoffed at until the people of Peterborough came to understand what a good work could be and was being accomplished by the Salvationists. The meetings in those days were held in the old Opera House but soon after the army began to gather in the Christian Science building on Aylmer Street, where the meetings took place until the present fine barracks was erected.

Peterborough was at this time the centre of what was called the Peterborough district and Staff Captain Bolton, Staff Captain Beattie and Staff Captain Marsha.. were three officers who were successively in command of the district.

Afterwards in 1890 the Peterborough district was included in the Kingston District and fifteen years ago was grouped in what is called the Eastern Ontario district.

Following are the different officers who have been in command of the Peterborough Corps since its inception:—Capt. Pople, Capt. Desson, Capt. Jones, Capt. Leonard, Capt. Gale, Capt. Steele, Capt. Michel,, Capt. Allward, Capt. Sims, Capt. MacDonald, Capt. Coombs, Capt. Wiseman (now a Major in the United States) Capt. Gibbs, Ensign Moore (now a Staff Captain at Montreal) Staff Captain McNamara, Adjutant Wiggins, Staff Captain Goodwin and Staff Captain Walton, the officer now in charge of the corps.

It was during the regime of Capt. Wiseman that the burning of the effigy of the Devil caused such a sensation, older residents will recall the memorable procession in which the effigy of His Satanic Majesty was carried through the streets in a coffin and after being dissected to prove to the enormous crowd the various evils he was composed of, the figure was consigned to the flames. This ceremony although objected to by some people had a good effect and brought converts to the fold.

The Army has grown steadily since its inception and now is a flourishing and influential body at whose service upwards of six hundred people participate. The regular members of the senior corps number two hundred people; there is in addition a congregation of about the same number while the junior corps or Sunday School has two hundred members.

BAND HAS FLOURISHED

In no department has been the growth more marked than in the band. At the start the band consisted only of Capt. Pople, the officer then in command and Mr. Mark Spenceley who is one of the oldest members of the corps. From that small beginning it has steadily grown until now it is one of the finest Army organisations in Canada, with a membership of about thirty-seven skilled musicians neatly uniformed and splendidly equipped. The band is a credit to the corps and to the City of Peterborough and is recognised as such by the citizens generally. The bandmen have to exercise considerable self sacrifice in their work as they are called upon to play three times on Sunday as well as frequently during the week.

A section of the public is often inclined to be cynical in regard to the work done by the Salvation Army despite the fact that it is one of the greatest philanthropic organisation in the world. A brass band in crimson uniforms parades along one of the main streets, and many citizens smile tolerantly at the active Salvationists, and reflect on the sensational methods adopted in advancing the cause. They little realise that the brass band, and the street corner orators are active factors in a body that aims to save not only souls but lives; an organisation that brings religion into the bustling realm of action.

General Booth who launched this Salvation Army movement in 1865 under the name of the Christian Mission has defined it as a "Force of men and women united together in love of God and man for the purpose of publishing His Salvation to the whole world." Numerous conversions have been made at the citadel or the street corner meetings, and many a drunkard has been led to a straight life from one of debauchery and waste through the strong work done by the local corps. One of the features of the War Cry, the official organ of the work is the distribution of movement, which is taken around to offices and through public buildings by Army officers. The Christmas War Cry is always an interesting and popular number and many copies have been ordered for this year.

"THE SMART SET"

You Will Certainly Enjoy an Evening's Merriment by Attending This Attraction at the Grand on Thursday, Dec. 9th.

That remarkable organisation of coloured singers, dancers, and comedians, the "Smart Set," will be the next attraction at the Grand Theatre next Thursday, Dec. 9, with the usual matinees. S. H. Dudley, one of the best known and withal cleverest negro fun-makers before the public, still heads the company. Supported by sixty capable people he will appear in the stellar role of Raspberry Snow, in a brand new three-act musical comedy entitled "His Honour the Barber." Those who have followed the career of this favourite comedian declare that he has the best role he has been called upon to portray in years. Fun is rampant from curtain to curtain and during the entire production there is neither a suggestive line nor vulgar situation. Fifteen original song hits and musical numbers are introduced, while the other features, scenic adornment and novelties, in the way of stage pictures, electrical and mechanical effects from all accounts are superior to anything offered to local theatregoers in years. The entire cast is composed of artists of ability who lend their talent and experience in lifting the entertainment to a state of perfection seldom witnessed on any stage. Raspberry Snow, who is a soldier of fortune, has any amount of humourous and exciting adventures He aspires to shave the President of the United States, but his ambition is only realized in a dream, which forms the basis of the second act. Raspberry is a confiding, good-natured person who gets into all sorts of trouble, especially with his sweetheart. He finally regains her affection by winning a horse race. The comedy has been staged in lavish style by Messrs. Barton and Wisewell, the owners, and patrons of the Grand Theatre may be assured of careful and satisfactory presentation. Others who contribute towards the fun are: Chris. Smith, James Burris, Irving Allen, Andrew Tripler, Matt Johnson, Jennie Pearl and Irene Cassel.

TAKE A COLD SERIOUSLY

The possibilities of every cold are dreadful to contemplate. Bronchitis, pneumonia, consumption, usually begin with a simple cold. Why not fight the cold from the start and ensure success by using Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine. It allays inflamation, keeps the cough free and loose and protects the bronchial tubes from danger.

NAVIGATION CLOSED

Rice Lake Frozen Over and Boats are Tied Up.

There were no vessels from Rice Lake this morning and navigation is done for the year. The river is open to the lake, but along the south shore the ice has set in, precluding any attempt to start a boat's nose towards Peterborough. The Monarch and Rainbow are both ice bound and will sail no more until 1910, according to the report received this morning. Last Saturday the Monarch made the trip, but several of the men had to proceed in advance in order to break the ice. This required several hours to cut a passage for the steamer, and in the meantime the channel had frozen again.

POST CARD COLUMN.

Editor Examiner:

Mr. Lastar, in his reply to my comment on the authority of his "independent" letters, acknowledges that he prepared his epistels in the office of and by the assistance of Mr. Alexander Elliott's staff. His confession of such fully confirms my claim and closes the matter so far as I am concerned. It shows the public the real position.

The mere fact that Mr. Lastar may have written with hi sown hand the manuscripts for the papers counts for nothing in determining the real author.

REV. SAM. SMALL,
Who Will Preach at St. Andrew's Church To-morrow Morning.

SAM SMALL AS PREACHER

A rather small head mounted on the shoulders of a tall, slim man; a chin rather forward; a firm mouth hidden by a dropping gray mustache, sharp nose and a pair of small piercing eyes surmounted by eyebrows that rise and fall and are the most expressive feature of an expressive face, a rather low ahead and a good head of iron gray hair combed in two "cart wheels" over the forehead—such was the man who held a packed church for an hour and a half at the anniversary service of First Methodist Church, last evening. Such was the man as seen by the crowd that stood in the side aisles and overflowed into the choir room—a man apparently of nervous temperament but great activity; of southern accent modified by travel and contract with all sorts and conditions of men. What the congregation heard was the clear, ringing voice of a man of great personal magnetism, a man accustomed to denouncing sin and vice in every form in the most outspoken, unmistakable words.

Dr. Sam W. Small, of Atlanta, Georgia, talked to the great gathering from the text, Proverbs 14: 34: "Righteousness exalteth a nation but sin is a reproach to any people." Such, said Dr. Small is the deliberate judgment of the wisest man who ever lived. After long experience he deliberately came to this conclusion, which has never since been challenged. This axiom is as true to-day as it was in the days of Solomon. We have the advantages of knowledge which he did not have, for in his time righteousness was a matter of law, or was a debatable question. Since the time of Jesus Christ it's no longer debatable. We have varying standards of righteousness, set by various philosophers and foolosophers, but since Christ came into the world to convince the world of sin there need be no doubt. If a person asks me if a certain thing is right or wrong I say I don't care what they think about it—I don't care a plugged nickel—I go into my closet and get down on my knees and say "Lord God, you have the key to the situation and I want you to tell me. No one else but you can tell me," and I have never followed His direction that I was not right. It is the business of the Holy Spirit in this world to so direct those who call upon it, and it is attending to that business.

Christ could not lay down rules to govern our actions in every circumstance that might arise so he promised the Holy Ghost which would direct his followers. Suppose he had been asked if it was right to play cards. He could not have answered. Cards had not been invented then. They were not invented until the keepers of a crazy king had to invent something to amuse him—and that has been their use ever since.

Christ said, "When the spirit of truth comes it shall lead you into all truth"—and that is what it is here for to-day. Sometimes the church divides upon the smallest question. Take for instance the liquor question. You will find some men who say they believe in the Holy Ghost, yet when election day comes you will find 60 or 70 per cent. of them marching to the polls and voting with the saloonkeepers and the devil. What will that Christian man answer the Holy Spirit when asked why he went marching with the saloonkeepers, the boosers, the old soaks? How will he keep his conscience void of offence before God?

If you ride upon a street car and the conductor passes you without collecting your fare and you do not call him back your conscience troubles you. You feel you are a thief—stole a nickel from that poor, struggling corporation. Why, then, is it that you do not feel the same when you go down to the polls and help the gang which is helping to rob and debauch the people? A man who wants to keep his conscience void of the offence will always seek the guidance of the spirit of God upon such an occasion.

Dr. Small compared conditions in the Old Country and America, much to the advantage of America, and particularly Canada. "I am perfectly pleased with the alertness of the people of Canada, the high tone of their ideals and the purpose with which they have prosecuted all good and just ends, and right here in Hamilton I see progress which gives me great confidence for the future. But we are not out of the woods yet. We have the same God to deal with. Do we think we can sin along the same lines as the nations of old and yet escape their punishment? If God destroyed Sodom and Gomorrah will he not also destroy New York and Hamilton if their sins are the same? When did we get such equality with the Omnipotent that we can say we will do as we please. We cannot do it. As surely as we commit the same sins we will suffer the same punishment as those other nations. They are digging up the ruins of those great cities of ages ago, and bringing them to our museums as evidence of their greatness and glory, and of their sins, degradation and ruin, and the same thing will happen to us unless we live nearer to God than they did.

"If you would ask what is the greatest trouble of the day that is preventing us from coming into the fulness of God, I would say the spirit of national fidelity which is abroad. I do not mean that infidelity of which it is said, 'The fool in his heart hath said there is no God. I have no time to bother with that sort of fool. The infidelity I refer to is that sort which dishonours God while professing to serve him. It is the kind of infidelity which says God is not in our governments, that the question of license or other public evil is entirely between me and my constituency, and God has nothing to do with it."

Getting this back to the liquor question again, Dr. Small said: "Do you know the devil would not have a saloon in hell. He don't want them there. He is too much of a gentleman. If some power were to establish 78 liquor shops in hell—as they have in Hamilton—the devil would vacate and rule the place of wireless.

If there were none of this national infidelity there would be a greater protection for the Lord's day. Do you think you can steal from God and escape? He has given you six days to provide for your own puny self and one day for God, yet our national infidelity is stealing that one.—Hamilton Times.

Don't forget—that with other good things we handle Sealshipt Oysters. Your order promptly executed.—Mitchell's Grocery corner of Reid and Sherbrooke, 'phone 615.

POST CARD COLUMN

Editor Post Card Column:

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—I have asked the question before, but I have not had a satisfactory answer to it. I have read the answer given by the Peterborough "Review," but that is about as nonsensical a reply as one could possibly obtain from any source, and I am now going to try and get the information from you.

As you are aware, when Hon. J. R. Stratton was Provincial Secretary, he had charge of the License Branch of Ontario, and I should be glad if you would answer this question yourself, or be good enough to ask Mr. Stratton to reply to it through the columns of the "Examiner."

"What effect will the carrying of Local Option have upon the Peterborough Club, which Club, at the present time, has the right to sell liquor to its members?"

Yours truly,
SUPPORTER OF LOCAL OPTION.

Note.—The "Examiner" has asked Mr. Stratton to reply to the question asked by the above correspondent, and he says:

"The adoption of a Local Option By-law does not affect a chartered Club in any way. The By-law can only prohibit the sale of liquor in any tavern, inn, or other place of public entertainment. The Club is not a place of public entertainment. It only supplies entertainment to its members and excludes the general public, and does not come within the terms of the By-law. The Club must take out a license under Section 53a of the License Act, which is as follows:

53a.—(1) No liquor shall be sold or supplied by any incorporated society, association or club heretofore or hereafter formed, or by any member, officer or servant thereof, to any member of such society, association or club, or to any other person unless and until a license for the sale of liquor by such society, association or club has been duly issued as hereinafter provided.

(2)—A license to be known as a "Club License" may upon application therefor be issued at any time by the Board to any such society, association or club, which is not by charter of incorporation or otherwise prohibited from selling liquor to the members thereof, upon payment of a fee of $50, and such license shall remain in force until the 30th day of April then next ensuing, but the provisions of this Act, not expressly applicable to such societies, associations or clubs, shall not apply thereto.

(3) Nothing in this Act contained shall authorize the sale of liquor upon the premises of any society, association or club to any person who is not a member thereof, nor to any person who is not of the full age of twenty-one years. 6 Edw. VII., c. 47, s. 28 (1-3).

(4) No license shall be granted under this section to any society, association or club which is prohibited by this Act, or by its charter of incorporation, or otherwise, from selling or supplying liquor to the members thereof. Nor shall any such license be granted to any society, association or club formed or incorporated under The Act respecting Benevolent, Provident and other Societies, and no license under this section shall be granted to any society, association or club not incorporated under the laws of the Province of Ontario until the consent in writing of the—Minister to the granting of such license has been filed with the Board. 6 Edw. VII. c. 47, s. 28 (4); 7 Edw. VII. c. 46, ss. 2 and 9; 9 Edw. VII. c. 82, s. 46.

A license "may" be issued upon application therefor to the Board of License Commissioners, upon payment of a fee of $50.00. The section referring to Licenses to Clubs, is Section 53a.

As the Peterborough Club is not prohibited by this Act, or by its charter of incorporation, or otherwise, from selling or supplying liquor to the members thereof, the Board of License Commissioners may grant a license.

Unincorporated Clubs or Associations are in a very different position, as they cannot obtain a license, and Section 53 of the Act governs unincorporated Clubs."

BASKETBALL

Last night the Blues had an exciting game of real basketball. The Blues started with only four men, and the Greens made their chance good, for they played hard while there was a man missing. Morrow played the usual game, fast and good team work, he scored the first 2 points, and things looked pretty blue for the Blues, and luckily for the Blues, Scott, their centre, showed up, and they succeeded in holding the Greens down to a small margin, and the first half ended 5 to 4, in favour of the Greens. It was a hard go and each man had to do his share, or it meant a loss for his team. There was no one (idol.))

Morrow and Wallace, of the Greens, were the men that played to suit the audience. Elliott and Carlisle did some work that deserves mention.

The second half started and Pearson, who is a new man for the Blues, is one who is going to keep things going for his team. He shot a basket from a difficult position and with his eyes shut, too, but it wasn't his fault that the ball fell in the basket, but it counted two points for his side.

The was go, from there, and it went. They played some pretty team work and Scott caked a goal for the Blues. The crowd raised the roof in the good old fashioned way.

Two minutes more to play and the score tied, but Stratton made a good shot and it really went in, and the game ended 11 to 9.

The line-up:—

Blues		Greens.
W. Stratton	L.F.	Phelan
H. Lees	L.F.	Wallace
H. Hill	R.G.	Morrow
R. Scott	C.	Carlisle
D. Pearson	L.G.	Elliott

GET CONTRACT

Wiring of Public Library Goes to F. R. J. MacPherson & Co.

F. R. J. MacPherson & Co., were awarded the contract for electric wiring in the new public library. Their tender was the lowest and when the committee took time to investigate the quality of material they intended to use it was found perfectly satisfactory. The Property Committee met yesterday afternoon and awarded the contract.

The committee also decided to recommend that the City Trust Commission look after the insurance on the municipal buildings and thus save the council a lot of bother and extra labor, which is unnecessary. The commission is a permanent body and it is felt that it can look after such matters much more satisfactorily than can the council which is changing each year.

ELECTED OFFICERS

Annual Meeting of Peterborough Club Held Last Evening.

The annual meeting of the Peterborough Club was held last evening. Dr. Boucher, the retiring president, was in the chair. The election of officers resulted as follows:

President—Mr. R. E. Wood
Vice-President.—Mr. T. F. Matthews.
Secretary-treasurer — Mr. W. R. Morris
Auditors—Messrs. Ferguson and Cross.
Executive Committee—Dr. R. P. Boucher Dr. Eastwood, and Messrs. E. G. Patterson and D. O'Connell.

ST. JOHN'S CHURCH

Rev. Mr. Pilcher of Toronto Will Give an Address To-morrow.

The Rev. Mr. Pilcher, the new organizing Secretary for Sunday Schools in the Diocese of Toronto, will be present in this city over Sunday in the interests of the Church of England Sunday Schools. The scholars of St. John's are specially requested to be present in their places by five minutes to three, any late comers will not be admitted until after prayers. The Gum Arabic Tree.

Mexican Tobacco Lands.

Mexico's best tobacco lands are in the state of Vera Cruz. The so called tobacco belt extends from Tuxpan river, in the northern part of the state, and beyond its southeastern boundary line and up to the republic of Guatemala. This belt is about 500 miles in length.

Scalds.

A scald is one of the most painful injuries. One of the best healing remedies is made by beating castor oil and white of an egg together until a cream is formed.

The Testaments.

The period in which the Old Testament was being written covers 1,000 years, while the period of the composition of the New Testament covers about 100 years. The oldest poems in the Old Testament date back to about the year 1200 B. C., while some of the Psalms and Book of Daniel are placed at the year 200 B. C. The earliest part of the New Testament was written about the year 50 A. D. and the latest part about 150 A. D.

Veal and Geese.

Roast veal is the most indigestible of butcher's meat. It takes five and one-half hours to digest. Roast goose takes two and one-half hours.

A Lofty Bounding Mark.

The highest placed monument in the world is on La Combre, the summit of a pass in the Andes, and marks the frontier of the Chilean and Argentine republics. It stands at an altitude of 12,790 feet above the sea level.

Moonlight in Cuba.

Moonlight most intense sometimes causes sore eyes in Cuba, and the natives navigate and perambulate with umbrella and parasuna.

Liberia.

The mineral resources of Liberia are practically unknown. Prospecting in that part of Africa is a matter of extreme difficulty, owing to the density of the forests and the disturbed state of the country.

Rhode Island.

Rhode Island received its name from what was supposed to be a resemblance in contour to the island of Rhodes in the Mediterranean.

JEFFRIES' EARLIER BATTLES
HOW HE EARNED THE TITLE

Story of the Hard Fights the Boilermaker Went Through in His Successful Career in the Ring---His Two Matches With Fitzsimmons Were Tough Contests.

Everybody is interested in the big fight which may and may not come off between Jack Johnson and Jim Jeffries on July 4th. Even if it does not come off the men will only lose $5,000.00 each, and it will be a very cheap $5,000.00 worth of advertising. What theatrical company would not give $5,000.00 for nearly a year's wholesome discussion of its virtues in every paper on the continent, thus having its name before the public in column articles every day?

But even if they do not meet it is interesting to look over their past performances. Jack Johnson's record, particularly of recent months, is so fresh that it needs no recalling. He has shown himself to be a clever, hard hitting and marvellously shifty and heady fighter of great weight and good generalship.

But the past performances of Jeffries are dim and need polishing.

Few people can recall how many rounds it took him to beat Ruby Bob. Jim Corbett or Tom Sharkey. Fewer still can call to mind the details of those struggles. I have taken the trouble to go back through the files of years gone by and read the press acounts of the fights, fresh from the fight scribe who put it on the wires the nights of the fights.

Jeff started to fight in July of 1896 at the age of 21, a marvellously powerful and heavy young giant, covered with black hair like some gorilla, with the strength of such an animal. He knocked out a few low raters and then took on Gus Ruhlin and Joe Choyinski, with whom he drew. Then in 1898 he was coming strong, winning decisions from Joe. Goddard, Peter Jackson, Pete Everett, Tom Sharkey and Bob Armstrong.

On June 9th, 1899, he fought Bob Fitzsimmons, one of the most remarkable fighters who ever stepped into a ring. Bob was 37 years of age at the time, and with a misplaced confidence in his own prowess had not trained as religiously as he should. He gave 13 years and 50 pounds in weight to Jeffries. He had the confidence of victories, and counted not on the enormous strength and the great store of youthful vitality which must be in the massive body of his opponent. The fight started with Jeffries coming slow from his corner and Fitz doing the aggressive work. Bang! Crash! the gloves of the Cornishman slapped and smacked agains. the huge bulk of his opponent, who contented himself with defensive work and countering Fits charged and led, doing all of the offensive work for ten rounds, cutting Jeffries' face and bringing streams of blood. But it was impossible to estimate the store of reserve energy in the young giant who took it all, countering heavily in every clinch and working away on Fits's body with his fearfully stiff punches. At last the eleventh came around, Fits had cut and led and landed, taking the punishment in the clinches. He had outpointed the youth from start to finish and yet had apparently sapped not an ounce of strength from that great body. Jeff was as strong as ever and Fitz's own efforts had worn himself out against the weight and strength of Jim Jeffries. The eleventh was the fatal one. Jeff. put Fitz down with blows to heart and body and head, but the game blacksmith staggered to his feet and stood, absolutely helpless, with drooping arms and sightless eyes in the middle of the ring. Jeffries waited for a second or two to see how far gone the champion was, saw he was all in, and stepped up close. Crash! He swung his left against the undefended jaw of the helpless Fitzsimmons, and Fitz. was carried away, while Jeffries was crowned champion by the roaring, fickle crowd.

Jeff and Sharkey.

Jeffries, now world's champion, next, on November 4th, 1899, took on his old rival, Tom Sharkey, the sailor-fighter a rugged, slam-bang sort of bruiser, with a certain amount of cleverness and a strength that carried him to victory in many battles against good men. Jeffries fought at 210 pounds and Sharkey entered the ring at 185. Sharkey, practically the same age as Jeffries, being only two years older, battered himself against the bulk of Jeffries for 25 rounds, having the best of the infighting, but seeming to have little effect with his awful wallops. Jeffries is spoken of as being slow in comparison with the aggressive sailor, who had Jeff. hanging on for the first 7 rounds, trying to wear the sailor out with the simple weight of his big body. In the eighth and ninth rounds Jeffries was still on the defensive and the sailor was rushing and slamming away in approved style. They wrestled and strained, round after round to the thirteenth, when Tom. cut loose some ox-felling smashes that landed fair and brought grunts of pain from the big boiler maker. In the eighteenth rouid Jeffries was shaken from head to heels by a jolting left to his jaw, but he seemed to come back strong in an instant.

The two great beings tugged and clinched again until the twenty-second, Tom working hard in the infighting, Jeffries hitting hard to body and head in the meeting and the break. This round saw Jeffries coming better. His strength still unimpaired by the hammering of Sharkey, he met rush after rush, finally shooting a raking right uppercut to the sailor's jaw, sending him wabbling to his corner as the gong rang. But he came back the next with his rushing, clinching, jamming methods, but his strength was nothing to Jeff's. Finally, in the twenty-fifth, with the floor slippery with blood, the sailor, rather weak on his pins, and the last round well along, Jeffries landed a smashing punch on the sailor man, who slipped on the wet floor and went down, clinging to Jeffrie's glove so strongly with his arm that the glove stripped from the boiler maker's fist. The referee sprang between and held the men apart while he tried to get the glove back on Jim's fist. Sharkey came up on the instant and raged about trying to get at Jeffries, but being held off by the referee who was putting on the glove. Then the gong rang and the decision went to Jeffries, whose wonderful body, weight, and strength had brought him another victory.

On May 11th, 1900, Jim Jeffries defeated Jim Corbett, once master of the ring, in twenty-three rounds doing the trick by the knockout route. For the twenty-three rounds Jim. ducked around the great heavyweight, counting and pointing beyond the ability of the boiler maker, who still showed signs of improvement in footwork and defense. But Corbett fought himself out and his blows harmed the iron body of Jeffries not a whit. As the twentieth round came along Corbett was showig signs of exhaustion and Jeffries was fresh. Still Corbett's friends thought he would last to the twenty-fifth, the end of the bout, and perhaps win by points, though in point of strength he was a mere child compared with Jeff. But in the twenty-third Jeffries woke up and smashed straight to his weakened opponent, finally putting him away and winning another great fight.

The Second Fitz Fight.

At the age of forty years Bob Fitzsimmons again met the big man who took his laurels from him. From beginning to end Fits. was on the aggressive, out-pointed and out-hit his adversary, cut his face to shreds, and badly damaged his eyes. But forty years of age is not twenty-seven, which was Jeffries' years. Also 50 pounds weight makes a dreadful difference against the lighter man. Fitzsimmons split Jeffries' mouth and blacksmithed away on it for eight rounds; he closed one eye and nearly closed another; he smashed his nose and hammered on the sore spot. Jeffries shed blood enough to satisfy a pig sticker in Armour's abattoir, but at the end of eight rounds was apparently as strong as ever.

The old press reports tell how Fitzsimmons led the way from the start, landing hard ond often on Jeffries' face. The first round was Bob's and the second also, Jeffries backing away from the stinging attacks of Bob, bleeding hard at nose and mouth. In crouching attitude, which he had been assuming during the past few fights, and stood up better. Fitz continued to jab and jab, his cutting blows making an awful mess of Jeffries' face. The fourth round saw Jeffries coming stronger and Fitz still continuing to cheerfully make ribbons of his features. But Jeff was working steadily on the Cornishman's body, knowing well that the weak spot in Robt. Fitzsimmons' makeup was his stomach. The fifth was the same, Jeff. taking the slashing, stinging wallops of the blacksmith on face, and head and shoulders, fully content so long as he could get in an occasional wallop at the lighter man's body.

In the sixth Fits. had succeeded in closing one of Jim's bleeding eyes and commenced on the other. He jabbed and jabbed on mouth and eye, pulping the flesh in a black and bloody mess. Jeff's eyes began to give him trouble but he was as strong as at the beginning. The seventh opened with Jim trying to force, but Fits. drove him back to the ropes with hard right and left to face. Jeff started to do some clinch work. He began giving Bob his shoulder in the clinches, digging that massive member into Fitz's weak stomach.

Then came the eighth. Fitzsimmons opened with a savage upperout that would have ended the fight at once if Jeff had not ducked it. They mixed furiously, Jeffries' weight counting terribly in this style of fighting. Then again they went to a savage clinch, and in the break Jeff hooked his right hard to Fitzsimmons' stomach with a blow which at first looked foul to the onlookers. Bob went down and out. Jeffries, his face smashed and gashed, was still as strong as when he stepped into the ring before the first round. His weight acquired science, and endurance had again brought him the palm. Is he as young now as he was then, and can he take the gaff as well? That is all the question that has to be settled when the discussion between himself and Mr. Johnson comes up next July.—The Optimist.

LINDSAY'S INTERMEDIATE TEAM SEEMS TO BE A STRONG "BUNCH"

Scugog Team Will Have Last Year's Forward Line Practically Intact, But Will Have to Dig Up a New Defence This Year---Expect to Have Good Line-up.

To those who have been over-exerting their lungs and faces shouting that Lindsay would not be represented in O. H. A. hockey this winter, how is this for a team:

Goal—Taylor.
Point—Greene.
Cover—Beatty.
Rover—Stoddard.
Centre—Randall.
Right wing—F. Cote.

Then the host of hockey players who will compete for various positions for the above team is merely a paper one. There are Killen, Cain, Dougan, McConnell and others.

But the line-up as given above will be the basis of the intermediate team which Lindsay will enter in the intermediate Ontario Hockey Association.

Taylor, who is slated for goal, is none other than Goosie, associated with hockey in Lindsay for years.

Greene, mentioned for point, is a rugby and baseball player and figured on the Bankers' line-up last year.

Stoddard, Randall and Frank Cote are members of the championship team last year and are known to the public as three of the speediest forwards in the game. Leo Cote is a Lindsay boy, who has been in the United States for a year or so, but who learned the game right on the home heath here and who showed signs of being a clever player with the Midgets a couple of years ago, when that team was playing junior hockey.

Then the contestants for other places on the team are well known as fast and good boys and, in fact, the team may be a different aggregation altogether, when the practices are commenced.

Lindsay not be on the hockey map this winter? Guess again!—Lindsay Warder.

JEFF CAN'T COME BACK, SAYS FITZ

Writting From Australia—Cornish Boy Says That Boiler-Maker Has Lost His Stamina.

New York, Dec. 3.—Bob Fitzsimmons doesn't believe Jim Jeffries can "come back." In a letter to a friend here, written from Australia, Lanky Bob declares that if Jeffries doesn't beat Johnson to a pulp and put him out inside of twelve rounds the big negro will be the victor. Fitz says Jeffries will have to fight harder and faster than he ever did before in his life, and that he will have to be better than he was five years ago to stand the punishment the negro will inflict.

True, Fitz doesn't take Johnson very seriously, declaring that ten years ago he could have beaten the black to death. He thinks that in his prime Jeffries was the best heavyweight that ever lived, but he doesn't think Jeff can recover his stamina.

WILL FIGHT FOR LARGEST PURSE

New York, Dec. 3.—Now that Jeffries and Johnson have agreed to fight for the purse offered by Tex Rickard and Jack Gleason, the figures are interesting.

Rickard and Gleason offered a cash purse of $101,000 and 66 2-3 of the receipts from the fight pictures to the fighters, the agreement being that the fighters were to share and share alike in the receipts for the pictures, while in their original agreement Jeff and Johnson agreed to split the cash purse so that the winner got 75 per cent., and the loser 25 per cent.

The fighters claim that the pictures will be worth a clear profit of $250,000. They base their figures on the fact that this is the greatest fight in the history of the ring, and that the Corbett-Fitzsimmons pictures netted a clear profit of $200,000.

Division of the Money.

It was in the belief that the pictures would net $250,000, it is said, that the fighters accepted the Gleason-Rickard offer.

If that amount be made by the pictures the fighters will get a total of $166,666.67. Each fighter will get half of this sum, win or lose. Each man will therefore draw down $83,333.33 irrespective of the outcome of the battle.

The $101,000 cash purse will be split, winner take 75 per cent., loser 25 per cent. The winner will therefore draw $75,750, while the loser must content himself with $25,250.

The Value to the Winner.

Adding the winner's share of the cash purse to his estimated share of the picture receipts makes a sum total of $108,583.33 that the vanquished will have to struggle along with.

As the battle will be for 45 rounds three hours will be taken up, if it goes the limit, so the winner will be working for $53,000 an hour.

As to the Promoters

What will Rickard and Gleason make?

It is believed it will cost them $25,000 to advertise and promote the fight. They will take the total gate receipts, out of which they must pay a cash purse of $101,000. With seats selling from $25 down it is believed the gate will net $125,000 or more. Privileges in the arena ought to bring in about $25,000 so that the managers will have about $150,000 out of which they must pay the $101,000 purse and the $25,000 for promoting the fight, leaving them about $24,000 net profit before the fighters enter the ring.

The fight promoters will get 33 1-3 per cent. of the receipts from the pictures. If this reaches the estimated $250,000 they will get $83,333.33 as their share.

This will give the promoters a clear profit of $107,333.33.

Weather Might Spoil It.

A rainy dark day that would prevent the taking of motion pictures would probably cut down everybody's share until th ereceipts would amount to no more than an ordinary fistic battle.

The promoters and managers are gambling on good weather.

Rev. Sam Small, D.D.

Word was received from Perth this morning that the addresses of Dr. Sam Small were simply magnificent. Dr. Small speaks as a man saved as a brand from the burning. He has been near the jaws of death, and cries out as a man who having known the power of evil, gloriously triumphs over the agencies of sin through the power of the cross of Christ. The reference from the Perth "Expositor" was inserted by the liquor interests which would like to stop the heart of such a man from crying out.

The Perth "Courier" deals effectively with the venomous article from its contemporary.

The Rev. Dr. Small will preach in St. Andrew's Church Sunday, 11 a. m. Subject :—"The Failure of Civilizations to Christianize the World." Special Offering for Foreign Missions.

Rev. Dr. Small will be present at the meeting at 3.30 in the Grand Opera House when Mr. C. R. Drum, of New York, speaks.

QUEEN'S TO ORGANIZE A UNIVERSITY MILITARY CORPS

The consciousness of Canadian nationhood, which is being shown throughout the country by the increased interest in military and naval matters is strongly in evidence at Queen's University, where an active and aggressive movement has been started to organise a University military corps. Professor Morison, of the Chair of History, who is one of the main supporters of the movement, has been in communication with the Militia Department at Ottawa, and has assured the students that the scheme has met with every encouragement from the Government.

The scheme, as it now stands, proposes a distinctive Queen's military unit, consisting of four companies of about forty men each, and advocates the adoption of the Kilts as the uniform. It is proposed that camp be held during the month of October; although the details of the plan have yet to be approved by the students, and the Militia department, the strong sentiment in favour of a military organization in the University, makes it almost certain that Queen's shall not be without her soldier.

The contracts for the two large new science buildings to be erected on the upper campus have been awarded and work on the excavations and foundations has begun. The cost of the buildings will be between $90,000 and $100,000. With the increased accommodation afforded by these the departments of Chemistry and Mineralogy will have those larger quarters which have been rendered imperative by the phenomenal increase of students in the scientific course, during the past few years.

The large number of students at Queen's from Western Canada, who have organized a most flourishing Queen's Western Association, are holding their annual banquet at the Hotel Randolph on Nov. 26.

Nominations are being made by the various faculties for the Alma Mater Society elections, which come off on Dec. 4. As Queen's students are a self-governing body, these elections are contested with all the heat and energy characteristic of a political campaign.

DENOUNCES RUGBY AS MURDER

Says Student Who Breaks Some Player's Nose Stands Higher Than a Master of Arts.

Richmond, Va., Dec. 3.—Col. John S. Mosby, the famous Confederate guerilla chieftain, lawyer, Land Commissioner of the United States and alumnus of the University of Richmond, in an interview to-day, said:

"I have read with indignation, mingled with sorrow, the account of the murder of young Christian, a student of the University of Virginia, in a football game in Washington with Georgetown University. I use the word 'murder' advisedly—the killing was not accidental.

"Some years ago I expressed to Dr E. A. Alderman, president of the university, my objection to football. A student who has broken somebody's nose at football stands higher than a master of arts. A man ought not to go to college to learn to be a circus rider or a prize fighter.

"Dr. Alderman says there is great danger to life and limb in football, and that the danger must be eliminated before it can be played any more. But if the danger is eliminated nothing will be left of the game. The danger is not only the chief, but the only attraction to the mob that gathers to witness it.

"The defenders of such sport say 'it develops the manhood of youth.' I deny it, unless by manhood they mean physical strength. My idea of manhood is a sense of honour and courage, and such qualities may exist in a weak body. The difference between the past and the present in great American universities is the distance between Stonewall Jackson and John L. Sullivan. Football simply develops the brute dormant in man's nature and puts the player on a level with an Esquimaux or a polar bear.

"Napoleon once said, 'scratch a Russian and you find a Tartar,' implying that Russian civilisation was only skin deep. If the university is a fair representative I fear that the same sarcasm equally applies in Virginia—my observation has been that athletes belong as a rule to that class who are invincible in peace and invincible in war."

WEATHER FORECAST

Washington, D.C., Dec. 4.—Last bulletin gave forecasts of disturbance to cross continent 8 to 9, warm wave 4 to 8, cool wave 7 to 11. The feature of this disturbance will be the great change from winter to springlike weather, threatening elements that will bring rain to but few localities of small extent and the lack of snow except in the far north.

Next disturbance will reach Pacific coast about 9, cross Pacific slope by close of 10, great central valleys 11 to 13, eastern states and provinces 14. Warm wave will cross Pacific slope about 9, great central valleys 11, eastern states and provinces 13, about 12, great central valleys 14, eastern states 16.

This disturbance will send the average temperatures still higher. Severe storms are expected but not much precipitation and freezing weather will be driven far northward. The warm weather and small amount of rain and snow will give farmers and planters an excellent opportunity to deliver cereals to the markets and as these deliveries will be large they may have a tendency to depress prices.

During that fine weather the late corn will make its first appearance on the markets in considerable quantities and by the close of December the country will be able to make a fair estimate of the 1909 corn crop.

The cotton is surely short and 15 cents is a reasonable price. But the oat crop is enormous, the largest ever produced. Foreign countries have produced a great crop of oats. As I see it, oats are too high or corn is too low. Prices of these two grains are not in proportion to the crops produced and it looks like manipulation.

My bulletins promised warm weather for Thanksgiving in the great central valleys and now I can promise temperatures below the normal for Christmas and some snow in latitudes where snow might be expected. I expect temperatures to remain high till Dec. 16, probably till 18.

Winter wheat will continue in splendid condition till end of December or longer and will promise the largest crop ever grown in America. But the fine conditions may not continue. I am giving more attention to crop conditions than heretofore and will give the benefit of what I may learn about them to readers of these bulletins. Millions of people read them throughout Canada and the United States and my ambition is to make my reports and advice reliable.

CABBAGE AND CAULIFLOWER GROWING.

From Farm and Dairy.

At the recent convention of the Ontario Vegetable Growers' Association in Toronto, Mr. A. McMeans, O.A.C., Guelph, made a report on his investigations in cabbage and cauliflower growing in the United States. The average price to growers the past few years, who have not contracted, was $8.50 a ton. Owing to the bad season this year the price went up to $40.00 a ton. Planting is done with a special machine, two boys planting alternately. The machine waters the place where the plants are planted in then covers the wet spot with dry earth.

The large growers in the United State reduce expenses by conveniences in storage and shipping. Where possible railway sidings are run alongside storage buildings. Shrinkage in cabbage stored is as much as 25 per cent. up to April 1. The wetter the season of growth the greater the shrinkage. In the shelf method of storage cabbages are put one deep, stump down in rack. A large quantity of cabbage is used in the manufacture of sauer kraut, the consumption of which is not confined to the German element. At Saginaw the average crop is ten to twelve tons an acre, and the prices from $6.00 to $10.00.

Yes, it is true, I was very weak, and Miller's Compound Iron Pills made me strong.—Wm. Madill, druggist.

WHAT IS A CORD OF WOOD?

From Farm and Dairy.

As everyone knows a cord of wood is a pile eight feet long, four feet wide and four feet long, or 128 cubic feet, no matter whether the sticks are long or short, straight or crooked, round or split, unless there is an understanding to the contrary. But contrary to the common belief, there are many times when a cord of wood is less than a cord, and, again, when it is more.

Woodlot owners and farmers owning small forest tracts who intend to sell cordwood are no less interested than contractors who buy and sell large quantities. It is surprising how much difference it makes whether the wood is cut long or short, chopped, or sawed, whether the sticks are round or split, large or small, and whether the measurements are made while the wood is green or after it is seasoned.

A lumberman may have a tract of pulpwood which he contracts to sell at $5, the wood to be cut and stacked. He cuts it in 12-foot lengths, makes 200 cords and receives $1,000 for it. The same amount of wood, if cut in 4-foot lengths, would have made but 176 cords, for which he would have received $880 and there would have been considerable additional labor in the cutting. While it was thus to the owner's advantage to cut the wood in the larger size, the buyer paid $120 more for the same amount of wood than if it had been cut in the smaller lengths.

It is always best to saw the wood, for the loss is scarcely half of one per cent. If chopped, the chips are lost; in a cord of four-foot wood, with sticks six inches in diameter, this loss amounts to from six to eight per cent.; and of course the shorter the sticks are cut the greater is the loss.

The difference due to space between the sticks depends very much on their shape and size. Straight, smooth sticks lie close together, and a cord therefore contains more wood and less air. Whatever the kind of wood used, cords of long sticks are pretty sure to contain more empty space than cords made of short pieces. A cord (128 feet) of 4-foot hardwood usually contains about 83 cubic feet of solid wood, 3-foot wood averages 83 1-2 cubic feet; 2-foot wood, 84 feet; 1-foot wood, 85 feet. Cords of conifers and softwoods usually contain from 90 to 96 cubic feet. Thus the purchaser buys on an average about two-thirds of a cord of real wood and one-third of space.

According to the reports of timber-testing engineers in the United States Forest Service, wood may lose half or more its green weight in seasoning. Cedar for lead pencils is bought by weight in this country, because the pieces are so small and of such irregular size that they cannot conveniently be stacked and measured as cordwood. The bulk of nearly all wood decreases as seasoning goes on. A hundred cords of green wood will make from 89 to 92 cords when dry. Therefore, when buying wood be sure that you get what you pay for.—

FALSE THEORIES

Lead to Worthless or Harmful Remedies

Stimulating the scalp may allay the itching of the dandruff, but that does not cure the scalp. The disease won't yield to quinine or capsicum nor alcohol, because it is caused by a germ or parasite. To cure dandruff the germ must be destroyed. Until recently there was no hair preparation or dandruff cure, or hair restorer on the market that would kill that insidious germ that dries up the scalp in little scales called dandruff, and absorbs the vitality of the hair, causing falling hair, and finally baldness. Newbro's Herpicide is the only really scientific preparation to cure dandruff, prevent falling hair and baldness. Sold by leading druggists. WANTED TIME FOR THOUGHT.

Arduous Duties Before the Head of the House Required His Entire Attention.

The baby was ill, and the doctor ordered that he be taken to the sea. This involved the closing of the house until the little one should be well enough to return. After the wife had secured hotel accommodations by the long-distance telephone, the man of the house went to his room and slowly and thoughtfully spread the entire contents of his wardrobe upon his bed, that they might be convenient for his wife to pack.

He stood surveying them, deep in meditation, when his wife came into the room and began to speak to him.

He raised his hand rebukingly. "Don't talk to me now, Susie, don't talk to me! I have a great deal on my mind. If we are going to the seashore day after to-morrow there are many things to be done, and I must plan."

His wife, who had already telephoned the butcher, milkman, baker, grocer, expressman and ticket office, and given the maid a month's vacation and arranged with a relative for the care of the dog, gazed at him in silence.

"A great deal on my mind," he repeated. Then the interrogative nature of his wife's silence forced him to explain.

"You see," he said, "I have got to put a nail in the cellar window and stop the newspaper."—Youth's Companion.

An Economical Barrel.

An economical retainer in which to ship products such as cement, lime and plaster is described in Popular Mechanics. Its halves are separable and can be nested in a compact form for the return journey. The cost of the barrel is about $1, which is a little more than twice that of a wooden barrel, but they are said to be good at least fifteen round trips, and the room they occupy when empty cuts down the shipping bill one-half.

CEMENT TO BE THE UNIVERSAL MATERIAL OF THE FUTURE

Thomas A. Edison declares that cement will be the universal material of the future. He recently expressed the opinion that his device for "pouring houses" of cement concrete by which an entire dwelling can be erected in one day was the most useful of all his inventions.

The manufacture of cement by the process now in vogue was invented by John Aspbill, an English bricklayer, in 1756. He called his product "Portland" cement because of its close resemblance to a building stone found in the island of Portland.

While Portland cement is a comparatively recent discovery, the ancients used a form of cement, produced probably by hydraulic pressure, in the construction of their most enduring public works. The secret of its manufacture apparently was lost after the downfall of Rome.

There is a long-standing dispute among scientists as to whether cement was used in building the Pyramids The accepted opinion at present is that it was used. The famous Appian Way, the Roman aqueducts and the roof of the Pantheon, all in a state of remarkably complete preservation, were built by the use of cement which was very extensively employed by the Romans.

Portland cement was introduced into America about 1865, being imported from England. Its cost at that time and for many years afterward was from five to seven dollars a barrel, so that its use was greatly restricted. Its manufacture was begun in the United States on a very small scale in 1872.

The first Portland cement mill in Canada was erected twenty years ago, in 1889, at Napanee, Ontario. Its output was less than 1,000 barrels a week but it brought the price of Canadian cement down to three dollars a barrel. This original mill is no longer in operation but its outcome is the Canadian Portland Cement Company which operates mills at Marlbank and Port Colborne, Ontario.

Down to 1902 the greater part of the cement used in Canada was imported from the United States, England and Germany. Since that year the domestic manufacture has increased very rapidly, the amount manufactured in Canada last year being nearly six times the total imports. From 1905 to 1908 the domestic output increased 1,000,000 barrels, while imports during the same period fell from 918,000 to 475,000 barrels.

The consumption of cement is increasing more rapidly than in any other country although the amount used per capita is still below that of the United States, England, Germany or France. The quantity used last year was over one billion pounds, or nearly four times as much as was used in 1901. A few general comparisons will give a better idea as to what this figure really represents.

The amount of cement used in Canada last year would be sufficient to build a four foot sidewalk half way around the world; it would pave a boulevard fifteen feet wide from the Atlantic to the Pacific. It would produce a column a foot square and 15,000 miles in height. The barrels in which it is contained, if laid end to end, would stretch 1750 miles.

There are at present twenty-three cement mills operating in Canada. Eleven of these have just been united into one large corporation called the Canada Cement Company, Limited. This new company operates mills extending from Quebec in the east to the Rocky Mountains in the west, and expects to introduce many economics by combining the sales departments of all the mills and filling all its orders from the nearest plant.

Cement is prepared for use as a building material by mixing it with rock, sand, gravel and water. The resultant substance is called concrete. It is used extensively in building operations and recently a twelve story skyscraper was erected in New York entirely of concrete. The great memorial bridge to be erected in honour of Henry Hudson is to be constructed of the same material and will have a main span three times as long as any similar bridge previously built. One of the novel uses to which concrete has been applied recently on Canadian farms is as a substitute for wood fence posts for which it has the advantage of being practically indestructible.

YOU WILL NOT BE DECEIVED

That there are cheats and frauds in plenty everybody knows; but it is seldom that any large business house is guilty of them, no matter what line of trade it follows. There can be no permanent success of any kind based on dishonesty or deception. There never was and never will be. The men who try that are simply fools and soon come to grief—as they deserve. Now, many persons are nevertheless, afraid to buy certain advertised articles lest they be humbugged and deluded; especially are they slow to place confidence in published statements of the merits of medicines. The effective remedy known as is as safe and genuine an article to purchase as flour, silk or cotton goods from the mills of manufacturers with a world-wide reputation. We could not afford to exaggerate its qualities or misrepresent it in the least; and it is not necessary. It is palatable as honey and contains all the curative properties of pure Cod Liver Oil, extracted by us from fresh cod livers, combined with the Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites and the Extracts of Malt and Wild Cherry; and how valuable such a blending of these important medicinal agents must be is plain to everybody. It is beyond price in Anaemia, Scrofula, Weakness and lack of Nervous Tone, all Lung Troubles and Impurities of the Blood. Science can furnish nothing better—perhaps nothing so good. Dr. Mack. of Canada says: "I have used it in my practice and take pleasure in recommending it as a valuable tonic and reconstructive." It is a remedy that can afford to appeal to its record and represents the science and knowledge of bright and aggressive medical investigation. Like all good things it is imitated. "You cannot be disappointed in it." Sold by chemists throughout the world. Warne Drug Co.

HAD HIS COLLAR BONE FRACTURED

St. Paul, Dec. 3.—When nearing his home a few days ago, Assemblyman A. William Cameron slipped and fell and his three-inch collar tore from the button and one end was forced into Cameron's neck. When he attempted to rise to his feet the sudden movement jerked the collar forward, cutting a gash four inches in length.

Bleeding profusely, Mr. Cameron was rushed to St. Joseph's Hospital, where it was necessary to make seven stitches to close the wound. The physicians at the institution marvel that the sharp end of the collar did not cut through the jugular vein.

SIR NIGEL

BY A. CONAN DOYLE.

Copyright 1903, 1906, by A. Conan Doyle.

"What is your devoir to me? Where are my thirty bowmen?" cried Knolles in bitter wrath. "Ten lie dead upon the ground and twenty are worse than dead in yonder castle. And all because you must needs show all men how bold you are, and ride into a hushment such as a child could see. Alas for my own folly that ever I should have trusted such a one as you with the handling of men!"

"By God, Sir Robert, you shall answer to me for those words!" cried Astley with a choking voice. "Never has a man dared to speak to me as you have done this day."

"As long as I hold the King's order I shall be master, and by the Lord I will hang you, James, on a near tree if I have further cause of offense! How now, Nigel? I see by yonder white horse that you at least have not failed me. I will speak with you anon. Percy, bring up your men, and let us gather round this castle, for, as I hope for my soul's salvation, I will not leave it until I have my archers, or the head of him who holds them."

That night the English lay thick round the fortress of La Brohiniere so that none might come forth from it. But if none could come forth it was hard to see how any could win their way in, for it was full of men, the walls were high and strong, and a deep dry ditch girt it round. But the hatred and fear which its master had raised over the whole countryside could now be plainly seen, for during the night the brushwood men and the villagers came in from all parts with offers of such help as they could give for the intaking of the castle. Knolles set them cutting bushes and tying them into fagots. When morning came he rode out before the wall and he held counsel with his knights and squires as to how he should enter in.

"By noon," said he, "we shall have so many fagots that we may make our way over the ditch. Then we will beat in the gates and so win a footing."

The young Frenchman had come with Nigel to the conference, and now, amid the silence which followed the leader's proposal, he asked if he might be heard. He was clad in the brazen armor which Nigel had taken from the Red Ferrot.

"It may be that it is not for me to join in your counsel," said he, "seeing that I am a prisoner and a French man. But this man is the enemy of all, and we of France owe him a debt even as you do, since many a good Frenchman has died in his cellars. For this reason I crave to be heard."

"We will hear you," said Knolles.

"I have come from Evran yesterday," said he. "Sir Henry Spinnefort, Sir Peter La Roye and many other brave knights and squires lie there, with a good company of men, all of whom would very gladly join with you to destroy this butcher and his castle, for it is well known amongst us that his deeds are neither good nor fair. There are also bombards which we could drag over the hills, and so beat down this iron gate. If you so order it I will ride to Evran and bring my companions back with me."

"Indeed, Robert," said Percy, "it is in my mind that this Frenchman speaks very wisely and well."

"And when we have taken the castle—what then?" asked Knolles.

"Then you could go upon your way, fair sir, and we upon ours. Or if it please you better you could draw together on yonder hill and we on this one, so that the valley lies between us. Then if any cavalier wished to advance himself or to shed a vow and exalt his lady, an opening might be found for him. Surely it would be shame if so many brave men drew together and no small deed were to come of it."

Nigel clasped his captive's hand to show his admiration and esteem, but Knolles shook his head.

"Things are not ordered thus, save in the tales of the minstrels," said he. "I have no wish that your people at Evran should know our numbers or our plans. I am not in this land for knight errantry, but I am here to make head against the King's enemies. Has no one aught else to say?"

Percy pointed to the small outlying fortalice upon the knoll, on which also flew the flag of the bloody head. "This smaller castle, Robert, is of no great strength and cannot hold more than fifty men. It is built, as I conceive it, that no one should seize the high ground and shoot down into the other. Why should we not turn all our strength upon it, since it is the weaker of the twain?"

But again the young leader shook his head. "If I should take it," said he, "I am still no nearer to my desire, nor will it avail me in getting back my bowmen. It may cost a score of men, and what profit shall I have from it? Had I bombards, I might place them on yonder hill, but having none it is of little use to me."

"It may be," said Nigel, "that they have scant food or water, and so must come forth to fight us."

"I have made inquiry of the peasants," Knolles answered, "and they are of one mind that their is a well within the castle, and good store of food. Nay, gentlemen, there is no way before us save to take it by arms, and no spot where we can attempt it save through the great gate. Soon we will have so many fagots that we can cast them down into the ditch, and so win our way across. I have ordered them to cut a pine-tree on the hill and shear the branches so that we may beat down the gate with it. But what is now amiss, and why do they run forward to the castle."

A buzz had risen from the soldiers in the camp, and they all crowded in one direction, rushing toward the castle wall. The knights and squires rode after them, and when in view of the main gate, the cause of the disturbance lay before them. On the tower above the portal three men were standing in the garb of English archers, ropes round their necks and their hands bound behind them. Their comrades surged below them with cries of recognition and of pity.

"It is Ambrose!" cried one. "Surely it is Ambrose of Ingleton."

"Yes, in truth, I see his yellow hair. And the other, him with the beard, it is Lockwood of Skipton. Alas for his wife who keeps the booth by the bridge-head of Ribble! I wot not who the third may be."

"It is little Johnny Alspaye, the youngest man in the company," cried old Wat, with the tears running down his cheeks, "Twas I who brought him from his home. Alas! Alas! Foul fare the day that ever I coaxed him from his mother's side that he might perish in a far land."

There was a sudden flourish of a trumpet and the draw-bridge fell. Across it strode a portly man with a faded herald's coat. He halted warily upon the farther side and his voice boomed like a drum. "I would speak with you leader," he cried.

Knolles rode forward.

"Have I your knightly word that I may advance unscathed with all courteous entreaty as befits a herald?"

Knolles nodded his head.

The man came slowly and pompously forward. "I am the messenger and liege servant," said he, "of the high baron, Oliver de St. Yvon, Lord of La Brohiniere. He bids me to say that if you continue your journey and molest him no further he will engage upon his part to make no further attack upon you. As to the men whom he holds, he will enroll them in his own honorable service, for he has need of longbowmen, and has heard much of their skill. But if you constrain him or cause him further displeasure by remaining before his castle he hereby gives you warning that he will hang these three men over his gateway and every morning another three until all have been slain. This he has sworn upon the rood of Calvery, and as he has said so he will do upon jeopardy of his soul."

Robert Knolles looked grimly at the messenger. "You may thank the saints that you have had my promise," said he, "else would I have stripped that lying tabard from they back and the skin beneath it from thy bones, that they master might have a fitting answer to his message. Tell him that I hold him and all that are within his castle as hostage for the lives of my men, and that within the lives of my men, and that should he dare to do them scathe he and every man that is with him shall hang upon his battlements. Go, and go quickly, less my patience fail."

There was that in Knolles' cold gray eyes and in his manner of speaking those last words which sent the portly envoy back at a quicker gait than he had come. As he vanished into the gloomy arch of the gateway the drawbridge swung up with creak and rattle behind him.

A few minutes later a rough-bearded fellow stepped out over the portal where the condemned archers stood and seizing the first by the shoulders he thrust him over the wall. A cry burst from the man's lips and a deep groan from those of his comrades below as he fell with a jerk which sent him half-way up to the parapet again, and then after dancing like a child's toy swung slowly backward and forward with limp limbs and twisted neck.

The hangman turned and bowed in mock reverence to the spectators beneath him. He had not yet learned in a land of puny archers how sure and how strong is the Engliah bow. Half a dozen men, old Wat amongst them, had run forward toward the wall. They were too late to save their comrades, but at least their deaths were speedily avenged. The man was in the act of pushing off the second prisoner when an arrow crashed through his head, and he fell stone dead upon the parapet. But even in falling he had given the fatal thrust and a second russet figure swung beside the first against the dark background of the castle wall.

There only remained the young lad, Johnny Alspaye, who stood shaking with fear, an abyss below him, and the voices of those who would hurl him over it behind. There was a long pause before anyone would come forth to dare those deadly arrows. Then a fellow, crouching double, ran forward from the shelter, keeping the young archer's body as a shield between him and danger.

"Aside, John! Aside!" cried his comrades from below.

The youth sprang as far as the rope would allow him, and slipped it half over his face in the effort. Three arrows flashed past his side, and two of them buried themselves in the body of the man behind. A howl of delight burst from the spectators as he dropped first upon his knees and then upon his face. A life for a life was no bad bargain.

But it was only a short respite which the skill of his comrades had given to the young archer. Over the parapet there appeared a ball of brass, then a pair of great brazen shoulders, and lastly the full figure of an armored man. He walked to the edge and they heard his hoarse guffaw of laughter as the arrows clanged and clattered against his impenetrable mail. He slapped his breast-plate, as he jeered at them. Well he knew that at the distance no dart ever sped by mortal hands could cleave through his plates of metal. So he stood, the great burly Butcher of La Brohiniere, with head uptossed, laughing insolently at his foes. Then with slow and ponderous tread he walked toward his boy victim, seized him by the ear, and dragged him across so that the rope might be straight. Seeing that the noose had slipped across the face, he tried to push it down, but the mail glove hampering him he pulled it off, and grasped the rope above the lad's head with his naked hand.

Quick as a flash old Wat's arrow had sped, and the Butcher sprang back with a howl of pain, his hand skewered by a cloth-yard shaft. As he shook it furiously at his enemies a second grazed his knuckles. With a brutal kick of his metal-shod feet he hurled young Alspaye over the edge, looked down for a few moments at his death agonies, and then walked slowly from the parapet, nursing his dripping hand, the arrows still ringing loudly upon his back-piece as he went.

The archers below, enraged at the death of their comrades, leaped and howled like a pack of ravening wolves.

"By Saint Dunstan," said Percy, looking round at their flushed faces, "if ever we are to carry it now is the moment, for these men will not be stopped if hate can take them forward."

"You are right, Thomas!" cried Knolles. "Gather together twenty men-at-arms each with his shield to cover him. Astley, do you place the bowmen so that no head may show at window or parapet. Nigel, I pray you to order the countryfolk forward with their fardels of fagots. Let the others bring up the lopped pine-tree which lies yonder behind the horse lines. Ten men-at-arms can bear it on the right, and ten on the left, having shields over their heads. The gate once down, let every man rush in. And God help the better cause!"

Swiftly and yet quietly the dispositions were made, for these were soldiers whose daily trade was war. In little groups the archers formed in front of each slit or crevice in the walls, whilst others scanned the battlements with wary eyes, and sped an arrow at every face which gleamed for an instant above them. The garrison shot forth a shower of crossbow bolts and an occasional stone from their engine, but so deadly was the hail which rained upon them that they had no time to dwell upon their aim, and their discharges were wild and harmless. Under cover of the shafts of the bowmen a line of peasants ran unscathed to the edge of the ditch, each hurling in the bundle which he bore in his arms, and then hurrying back for another one. In twenty minutes a broad pathway of fagots lay level with the ground upon one side and the gate upon the other. With the loss of two peasants slain by bolts and one archer crushed by a stone, the ditch had been filled up.

It was ready for the battering-ram.

With a shout, twenty picked men rushed forward with the pine-tree under their arms, the heavy end turned toward the gate. The arbalesters on the tower leaned over and shot into the midst of them, but could not stop their advance. Two dropped, but the others raising their shields ran onward still shouting, crossed the bridge of fagots, and came with a thundering crash against the door. It splintered from base to arch, but kept its place.

Swinging their mighty weapon, the storming party thudded and crashed upon the gate, every blow loosening and widening the cracks which rent it from end to end. The three knights, with Nigel, the Frenchman Raoul and the other squires, stood beside the ram, cheering on the men, and chanting to the rhythm of the swing with a loud "Ha!" at every blow. A great stone loosened from the parapet roared through the air and struck Sir James Astley and another of the attackers, but Nigel and the Frenchman had taken their places in an instant, and the ram thudded and smashed with greater energy than ever. Another blow and another! the lower part was staving inward, but the great central bar still held firm. Surely another minute would beat it from its sockets.

But suddenly from above there came a great deluge of liquid. A hogshead of it had been tilted from the battlement until soldiers, bridge, and ram were equally drenched in yellow slime. Knolles rubbed his gauntlet in it, held it to his visor, and smelled it.

"Back, back!" he cried. "Back before it is too late!"

There was a small barred window above their heads at the side of the gate. A ruddy glare shone through it, and then a blazing torch was tossed down upon them. In a moment the oil had caught and the whole place was a sheet of flame. The fir-tree that they carried, the fagots beneath them, their very weapons, were all in a blaze.

To right and left the men sprang down into the dry ditch, rolling with screams upon the ground in their endeavor to extinguish the flames. The knights and squires protected by their armor strove hard, stamping and slapping, to help those who had but leather jacks to shield their bodies. From above a ceaseless shower of darts and of stones were poured down upon them, while on the other hand the archers, seeing the greatness of the danger, ran up to the edge of the ditch, and shot fast and true at every face which showed above the wall.

Scorched, wearied and bedraggled, the remains of the storming party clambered out of the ditch as best they could, clutching at the friendly hands held down to them, and so limped their way back amid the taunts and howls of their enemies. A long pile of smoldering cinders was all that remained of their bridge, and on it lay Astley and six other red-hot men glowing in their armor.

Knolles clinched his hands as he looked back at the ruin that was wrought, and then surveyed the group of men who stood or lay around him nursing their burned limbs and scowling up at the exultant figures who waved on the castle wall. Badly scorched himself, the young leader had no thought for his own injuries in the rage and grief which racked his soul. "We will build another bridge," he cried. "Get the peasants binding fagots once more."

But a thought had flashed through Nigel's mind. "See, fair sir," said he "The nails of yander door are red-hot and the wood as white as ashes. Surely we can break our way through it."

"By the Virgin, you speak truly!" cried the French Squire. "If we can cross the ditch the gate will not stop us. Come, Nigel, for our fair ladies' sakes, I will race you who will reach it first, England or France."

Alas for all the wise words of the good Chandos! Alas for all the lessons in order and discipline learned from the wary Knolles. In an instant, forgetful of all things but this noble challenge, Nigel was running at the top of his speed for the burning gate. Close at his heels was the Frenchman, blowing and gasping, as he rushed along in his brazen armor. Behind came a stream of howling archers and men-at-arms, like a flood which has broken its dam. Down they slipped into the ditch, rushed across it, and clambered on each other's backs up the opposite side. Nigel, Raoul and two archers gained a foothold in front of the burning gate at the same moment. With blows and kicks they burst it to pieces, and dashed with a yell of triumph through the dark archway beyond. For a moment they thought with mad rapture that the castle was carried. A dark tunnel lay before them, down which they rushed. But alas! at the farther end it was blocked by a second gateway as strong as that which had been burned. In vain they beat upon it with their swords and axes. On each side the tunnel was pierced with slits, and the crossbow bolts discharged at only a few yards' distance crashed through armor as if it were cloth and laid man after man upon the stones. They raged and leaped before the great iron-clamped barrier, but the wall itself was as easy to tear down.

Recommended As An Ideal Remedy

W. S. BOND, Esq.

Lloydtown, Ont., March 19th, 1909.

"For some years I have been greatly troubled with headaches and indigestion, brought on by stomach disorders, constipation and biliousness. I had tried many remedies with only indifferent success, until "Fruit-a-tives" came to my notice. Being a general storekeeper, I was selling a good many "Fruit-a-tives" to my customers and, remarking how pleased they were with the results obtained from using "Fruit-a-tives," I decided to try them and, I might say, the effects were almost magical. Headaches and biliousness disappeared and to-day I recommend "Fruit-a-tives" to my customers as 'An ideal remedy.'

"I might also add that about three years ago I was laid up with LUMBAGO AND SCIATICA—couldn't get out of bed or lift one foot over the other. A good treatment of "Fruit-a-tives" cured me of these pains and banished the Sciatica and Lumbago so that to-day I am as well as ever and can lift anything necessary."

Good Wheat Thoroughly Cleaned — The Vital Essential

NO DOUBT, when purchasing flour, you have often wondered at this legend flaunted by all cheap flours—

"Made from Selected Wheat."

Certainly, the wheat was "selected" else there would be no flour at all. But what sort and condition of wheat it telleth not.

Maybe it doth not wish to carry tales out of school.

We are proud to label FIVE ROSES so that all may see—"Manitoba Hard Wheat."

We are jealous of its reputation. We are convinced there is no better grain grown under the sun, none as good.

* * * *

After culling the cream of the crop, twenty-one years' practice has taught us how to take care of the good stuff.

Coming direct from the farmers' wagons, even before it is admitted to the elevators, the grain is rid of its grosser impurities.

Cockle, for instance, round seeds, sand, mud and earth balls, pieces of string, nails, and goodness knows what.

If this ever got into the flour!

* * * *

We are proud of our immense capital and superior organization, and duly thankful.

Many good millers would produce better flour with such equipment than is now possible for them to hope for.

These impurities if stored with the wheat for even a short time will contaminate the grain, just as one bad boy can vitiate a schoolroom.

The cleaning and separation must be done at the elevators, Madam.

No amount of subsequent cleaning or "doctoring" will entirely eliminate the influence of its early associates. You understand that, of course.

* * * *

Thus is the childhood of FIVE ROSES immaculate and irreproachable.

The pure Manitoba berries are clean at the outset and kept clean, and when they reach the Keewatin mills a further process is relied on to polish off any possible bad manners which might smuggle in on the way home.

There is never a speck, nor stain, nor smell to vex the soul of the fastidious housewife.

* * * *

We will not believe, Madam, that you are wholly indifferent to the welfare of your family folks, to flawless purity in your baking.

We know you will always use FIVE ROSES.

FRESH and fragrant from the finest tea-producing country in the world—The Island of Ceylon. Do you know "SALADA" Tea by Flavor? Have you ever enjoyed its deliciousness and downright goodness? "SALADA" is "hill-grown" tea—grown on plantations high up on the hills. The leaves are small and tender, with a rich, full flavor. It is picked every week, and reaches you fifteen weeks later in air-tight, sealed "SALADA" packets. Its native purity and fine flavor are perfectly preserved. You are guaranteed tea of unvarying good quality.

DIMINUTIVE FARMS.

The Way Real Estate Is Divided Up in Portugal.

The Portuguese are an extremely conservative people. Every man follows rigidly the methods employed by his father and forefathers. In very many parts of the country the old wooden plowshare still used.

When a man dies, instead of one of the heirs taking the whole property and paying the remaining heirs for their parts the whole property is divided into as many parts as there are heirs. More than this, each separate part of the property is thus divided.

Thus, if the property consists of ten acres of pasture land, eighty of vineyard and seven of grain land and there are ten heirs, each heir will receive one acre each of grain and pasture land and eight acres of vineyard. This process has been going on for a very long time, so that now in the most fertile part of Portugal the land is divided into incredibly small portions.

The immediate result of this, according to the United States consular reports, is that the product of the land is only sufficient at best to sustain its users. South of the river Tagus, on the other hand, there are enormous tracts of excellent land lying unused, but it has been found impossible to induce the farmers of the north to move into this region and take up large holdings.

The Truly Reticent Woman.

Speak of a reticent woman and most people picture to themselves a woman who doesn't talk much. But the truly reticent woman—the woman who takes reticence an art—is not at all silent. She talks with what is apparently the greatest candor, so that people go away from her saying what a frank, genial woman she is. And no one ever suspects, unless he or she is phenomenally clever, that the genial conversationalist had all sorts of unspoken things in her mind.—Exchange.

Mrs. Pankhurst and Her Daughter Are Here—Suffragette War Imminent.

Mrs. Pankhurst and her daughter Christabel, the militant English suffragettes, have recently arrived in this country from London. Mrs. Pankhurst for her lecture tour through the country has prepared some very exciting subject matter. She will tell of the fight being made by the suffragettes in London and of the assistance they received from many American women, several of whom were arrested and sent to jail. She will tell of her own experience at the hands of the police, of scrubbing jail floors and of going through a hard jail routine as a prisoner for the cause. Mrs. Pankhurst is confident women will win the ballot in England and is anxious to see as bitter a fight waged in the United States. It is doubtful, however, if she will induce American women to follow the example of their English sisters in resorting to violence and bidding for sympathy by starving themselves when serving jail sentences. The American suffragist, though, has become an adoring imitator of her English sister. Many of the ideas for the winter campaign in the fight for the ballot are of English origin, and Mrs. Pankhurst and her daughter will not be the only women from the British isles to visit the country in the next few months in the interest of the cause. In a sense the visitors will only even up the score, for many American women have been active in the suffragist agitation in London. Two young American women were among those who served prison terms for the attempt to storm the house of commons, and others have been engaged in a speechmaking tour of England and Scotland.

Mrs. Pankhurst has not displayed any great gift of diplomacy in her ballot fight abroad, but in America it will be very necessary for her at least to attempt to reconcile the opposing forces that have lined themselves up for the fight. Mrs. Clarence Mackay and her Equal Franchise society will have nothing to do with militant suffragists, and this very gifted worker in the cause says it is not "necessary to go out and shriek the propaganda in the streets." Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont's organization, on the other hand, has invited the English belligerents to come over here and lecture, so there is likely to be friction in the opposing camps, if not war to the knife.

Chicago clubwomen have "turned down" Mrs. Pankhurst, giving as the reason that her prices are entirely too high. She has come to this country under the management of a bureau that charges $600 for one lecture. The matter was submitted also to the largest club in St. Louis and voted down, but New York and Philadelphia, however, are prepared to make much of the English champion despite the high price.

How to Please Him.

Men appreciate tenderness. They value the little proofs of love every whit as much as a woman—long just as keenly to hear those three little words, the sweetest in any language when spoken by the right lips. And yet many girls ignorantly or wilfully ignore this and absolutely starve their lovers as far as any expression of their love is concerned.

It pleases a man to see a woman be loves gentle and considerate in her home life. He may appear to be a trifle jealous of the duties that absorb some of the time which might be devoted to himself. Yet in his heart he would not have her one iota less loving to her own people. He knows the truth of the old saw and how good an omen it is for the future.

A certain maidenly dignity always pleases a man. Underneath the girlish love of fun and pleasure he delights to know there is a sturdy self respect that will respect his rights as well as her own.

It pleases a man to find the woman he loves companionable and able to take an interest in the things that interest him, to meet a smiling face on which frowns are unknown and a pair of bright eyes that grow brighter as they seek his own or more hopeful at his sorrows.

FIGHT TUBERCULOSIS

Millions of leaflets are being circulated among the people of the Empire, informing the masses how to guard against Tuberculosis, of which 100,000 Germans die every year. The time is fast approaching when this disease will be treated like diphtheria and smallpox—the patient being isolated and removed from contact with others.

Meantime it is to be hoped the masses will learn the all-important lesson of guarding against coughs and chest colds, from which tuberculosis always springs. When your throat tickles, your chest feels tight and sore, when you sneeze and feel cold shivers up your back — that should be your warning.

Nerviline Will Assist

The following treatment is known to be very efficient: Give the chest and throat a vigorous hand-rubbing with Nerviline, and take twenty drops of Nerviline in hot, sweetened water. If there is any hoarseness or cough, gargle well with Nerviline and put a Nerviline Porous Plaster over the chest. By following this advice you can keep clear of colds, pneumonia, bronchitis, and preserve uniform good health. This is worth cutting out and preserving.

A Joker.

A seedy looking man entered a store in Trenton the other day and asked for assistance, backing up his request with a long tale of sickness and lack of employment.

With a wink at his clerk the merchant pointed to a friend who happened to be in the place and replied:

"Ask that gentleman. He is the proprietor. I am only a clerk."

The friend received the beggar's request in a sympathetic manner and, turning to the merchant, remarked: "This seems to be a worthy case, Mr. Jones; give him a dollar from the cash register," and walked out of the store.

It was in vain that the merchant protested that it had been a joke. So insistent did the seedy one become that "de boss'" directions should be carried out that it was finally necessary to do so in order to be rid of him.—Lippincott's Magazine.

Stations of the Dead.

New South Wales has seven "stations of the dead."

"The stations referred to are as follows: First, the mortuary station at Sydney, where all the funeral trains start from. This is a stone building with a good-sized platform and an arch right over the train, where the hearse stops; the whole building is beautifully carved, and was erected in 1867.

"There are four cemetery stations on the Rookwood branch, which diverges from the main suburban line ten miles from Sydney. The branch line is one mile and a half long, and the first station on it is of the same style as the mortuary station in Sydney, and was erected in 1868.

"The other three stations are of very much later design and build. One more is at Sandgate, four miles from Newcastle on the main northern line. The last is on the Woronora cemetery branch, which leaves the main South Coast Railway at Sutherland, 15 miles from Sydney."

Woman Millionaires.

The Marchioness of Graham is the richest British-born lady, for on the death of her father, the twelfth Duke of Hamilton, she came into an income of $560,000 per annum. The Duchess of Roxburghe was left $25,500,000 by her father, Mr. Ogden Goelet. The Baroness von Eckhardstein came this year into the second portion of the fortune left by her father, the late Sir John Blundell Maple, making her total income $336,000 per annum. The Countess Szechenyi, as Miss Gladys Vanderbilt, inherited $12,500,000.

Secret of Longevity.

Prof. Goldwin Smith, who recently entered upon his eighty-seventh year, was once asked for the secret of longevity. He replied that he had no secret to impart. "I have never," he said, "observed any particular rules of diet, except that of general moderation. I have always avoided working late at night. I have taken a good deal of outdoor exercise. When younger I wandered on the Alps, went out shooting, and rode with foxhounds."

Please give me a penny."

The man after searching himself said: "I haven't got a penny. All I have is a nickel. Give me your four cents in change, and I will give you the nickel."

When Basting.

When you have lots of basting to do thread several needles at one time and then when you use one thread leave the needle in and take up another until all are used. When you wish to remove basings, cut the knot and take the needle and draw it out, and your needle is threaded and ready for use again. It saves time in threading needles and picking threads off the floor.

HOMEMADE LAMP SHADE.

Charming Effects Easily Evolved With Colored Cut Paper.

It will be readily seen from a glance at the illustrations that the designs used for this paper lamp shade are similar to those used in the popular art of stenciling. If you want to carry out original patterns you must trace their subject with a broad double outline of uniform width—to simulate the leading employed in real stained glass—upon stiff cardboard, which should not be very thick or the cutting out process will be rendered very difficult. To make the shade four or six sections will be required for the sides and a square piece for the top. The cardboard is then laid on a sheet of glass or very smooth hard wood and all the intervening spaces between the lines cut away with a sharp pointed knife or with small scissors. The keen edged, delicate instruments used for manicuring are ideal for this purpose. This is really the only troublesome part of the work. Once the skeleton framework of the design is successfully made the rest is easy. A tiny file or emory paper can be used to smooth all rough edges. Any unevenness must be pressed out and corners neatly finished. The framework is then painted with two or three coats of ivory black water color paint and then given a final coating of gum water or white of egg to impart a slight varnish. Book cloth is used for the colored portions of the design. It is strong and durable, withstands heat and comes in all shades. Bookbinders are glad to supply bundles of assorted remnants in various hues—small, oddly shaped pieces that are left over from their work, but invaluable to the imitators of stained glass, which is composed of a patchwork of small scraps pasted on the back of the framework. The shapes required are easily traced on the book cloth and cut out a trifle larger to allow for pasting. Each piece is cut separately and pressed into place.

Not more than four or five colors appear in a design.

HEALTH AND BEAUTY.

If you are ever forced to keep on your shoes when they are wet try cutting pieces of blotting paper to fit in your shoe. It will absorb a large majority of the dampness and feel much more comfortable next to the foot than the wet leather.

To use carbolic acid for disinfecting, the crystals must be dissolved in water, the proportions being one part to twenty parts of water. The infected clothes are boiled in this solution for an hour or so. By the end of that time even the most resistent germs and spores will be killed.

Do all your hair brushing, facial massage and the like before retiring rather than in the morning. Not only does this allow more time to sleep late, but the actions are soothing to the body, and the good results from the treatment have plenty of time to be felt before morning.

A burning or itching sensation produced after bathing in either warm or cold water, lasting from a few minutes to a half hour, is likely to occur in persons with a naturally irritable skin and especially when there is a tendency to hives. The cause lies not in the bath itself, but in a digestive or nervous disturbance and should be corrected through restricted diet and plenty of exercise. In these cases the bath should always be quickly taken and every particle of soap removed, the body dried without friction and dusted freely with a powder consisting of equal parts of starch and zinc oxide.

A simple exercise that has the advantage of being practicable in any moment of leisure is muscular contraction and expansion of the abdomen to keep it flat. Sit very erect in a chair or stand with the shoulders well back. Clasp the hands over the abdomen and without moving any other part of the body quickly contract the abdominal muscles. Hold a second, then relax quickly. It is important not to lift the chest in these movements, though at first it will be hard to prevent. Do not exercise these muscles too long at a time. A minute is enough at first and never more than three minutes continuously.

Miss Goldenrod, the heiress, is, oh, quite the rage at present!

DIMINUTIVE FARMS.

The Way Real Estate Is Divided Up In Portugal.

The Portuguese are an extremely conservative people. Every man follows rigidly the methods employed by his father and forefathers. In very many parts of the country the old wooden plowshare still used.

When a man dies, instead of one of the heirs taking the whole property and paying the remaining heirs for their parts the whole property is divided into as many parts as there are heirs. More than this, each separate part of the property is thus divided.

Thus, if the property consists of ten acres of pasture land, eighty of vineyard and ten of grain land and there are ten heirs, each heir will receive one acre each of grain and pasture land and eight acres of vineyard. This process has been going on for a very long time, and now in the most fertile part of Portugal the land is divided into incredibly small portions.

The immediate result of this, according to the United States consular reports, is that the product of the land is only sufficient at best to sustain its users. South of the river Tagus, on the other hand, there are enormous tracts of excellent land lying unused, but it has been found impossible to induce the farmers of the north to move into this region and take up large holdings.

The Truly Reticent Woman.

To speak of a reticent woman and most people picture to themselves a woman who doesn't talk much. But the truly reticent woman—the woman who makes reticence an art—is not at all silent. She talks with what is apparently the greatest candor, so that people go away from her saying what a frank, genial woman she is. And no one ever suspects, unless he or she is phenomenally clever, that the genial conversationalist had all sorts of unspoken things to her mind.—Exchange.

A friend told me to try Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, and before the first box was taken I was almost well, and the second box completed the cure. I have advised many others to try them, and they have all been cured of the same trouble. I have offered to pay for a box for anybody they do not cure."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are a specific for all diseases or disorders arising from the heart or nerve system. They make the weak heart strong and the shaky nerves firm by imparting a strengthening and restorative influence to every organ, and tissue of the body and curing palpitation of the heart, dizziness, sleeplessness, anaemia, twitching of the muscles, sensation of "pins and needles," general debility, lack of vitality, etc.

To use carbolic acid for disinfecting, the crystals must be dissolved in water, the proportions being one part to twenty parts of water. The infected clothes are boiled in this solution for an hour or so. By the end of that time even the most resistent germs and spores will be killed.

Do all your hair brushing, facial massage and the like before retiring rather than in the morning. Not only does this allow more time to sleep late, but the actions are soothing to the body, and the good results from the treatment have plenty of time to be felt before morning.

A burning or itching sensation produced after bathing in either warm or cold water, lasting from a few minutes to a half hour, is likely to occur in persons with a naturally irritable skin and especially when there is a tendency to hives. The cause lies not in the bath itself, but in a digestive or nervous disturbance and should be corrected through restricted diet and plenty of exercise. In these cases the bath should always be quickly taken and every particle of soap removed, the body dried without friction and dusted freely with a powder consisting of equal parts of starch and zinc oxide.

A simple exercise that has the advantage of being practicable in any moment of leisure is muscular contraction and expansion of the abdomen to keep it flat. Sit very erect in a chair or stand with the shoulders well back. Clasp the hands over the abdomen and without moving any other part of the body quickly contract the abdominal muscles. Hold a second, then relax quickly. It is important not to lift the chest in these movements, though at first it will be hard to prevent. Do not exercise these muscles too long at a time. A minute is enough at first and never more than three minutes continuously.

Miss Goldenrod.

Down the road a piece or so lives a flower maiden.
With more pure gold than they can hold
Her lucky arms are laden.
A week ago she was quite poor, who now is rich and stately.
Good fortune knocked upon her door, the

In plant society, what with her manners

Miss Goldenrod, the heiress, is, oh, quite the rage at present!

Tone Is Always First

Tone is the most important feature of a piano—because, on the quality and permanency of tone, depends the value of the piano.

The magnificent, singing tone of

New Scale Williams Piano

unapproachable in sweetness, mellowness and majesty—is possible because the New Scale Williams Piano not only is more heavily strung on its massive plate and scale, than other Pianos, but also because of the Harmonic Tone Prolonging Bridge which prevents the introduction of faulty and imperfect tones.

If your home needs a piano to complete its coziness, perhaps our plan of buying a New Scale Williams on easy payments will interest you. Write for full particulars and copies of our illustrated booklets.

Dear Sir,—Just a line to let you know what a great benefit I have derived from your excellent course. I may say that a person in conversation with me now would never imagine that I ever stuttered, and I owe my present condition wholly to your instructions. I sincerely believe that any person, no matter how badly afflicted, may be cured in a very short time if they will but follow your instructions, and I will certainly recommend you to any stammerer that I may come in contact with.

A CHANGE OF HEADS.

The Trick a Dusky Ruler Wanted a Magician to Perform.

Thurston, the magician, had many interesting experiences during his professional tour of the globe several years ago. He went to all sorts of outlandish places and appeared before rulers of many strange lands and communities. On one occasion his manager had arranged that Thurston should give an exhibition before the ruler of a province called Pagopago, in the Fiji islands. In the crowd that saw the exhibition were many of the black and yellow slaves of the chieftain. All the spectators were amazed at the many strange manifestations of the black art that Thurston offered, but no trick appealed so strongly to the assembled retinue and to the chieftain as that in which a white duck was made to appear with a black head and a black duck, after a moment's manipulation, with the head of the white duck. The trick had to be repeated, and then the chieftain engaged in a long whispered conversation with the interpreter.

"What is desired?" queried the obliging trick player.

The interpreter coughed apologetically and then responded: "Respected sir, our honored sire wishes you to take two of his slaves and put a yellow head on a black man and the black head on the body of a yellow servitor. Our honored sire thinks it would be very funny."

"Tell his royal highness," Thurston replied, "that I could give a yellow man a black eye, but I would not like to attempt to make his entire head black."

MONEY IN JUNK.

The Stuff Is Always in Demand, and the Profits Are Large.

Up and down the dirty back alleys drives the junkman, singing his mournful, nasal cry, loading his rickety wagon with broken scraps and pieces of old iron, an object of pity or of ridicule to most of the uninformed public.

Let him be admired or envied, rather, for if not he himself, at least his employer, is probably making more money than nine out of ten professional men.

Few things are more depressing and unsightly than a little pile of junk as high as a two story building. One may see such piles in every city, and, so far as the casual observer can determine, none of the stuff is ever moved. The piles increase apparently from month to month and grow rustier and rustier, but the men in the business keep on buying.

How are they able to keep so much money tied up? Where do they get the large amount of capital which seems to be necessary?

They borrow from the banks, like any other business man, on the security of their stock in trade.

"No better security," the president of almost any bank will declare. "It can neither burn nor blow away. It can't be damaged by water or smoke. Where is there a collateral like that? It is absolutely safe. The foundries and the nut and bolt works and the stove factories can't get along without it. It pays the largest profits of any business to which we lend money, and these profits fluctuate very little. Junk is always in demand. The men in that business are excellent customers."—Technical World Magazine.

He Hitched.

DOCTORS ADVISE MEDICATED AIR

It Cures Catarrh, Colds, Bronchitis, Asthma, Throat Troubles, Hoarseness.

For diseases of the lungs, throat and nasal passages mountain air has always been deemed salutary because of its pureness and freedom from disease germs. The air of pine forests, laden with minute particles of volatile germ-destroying principles, has enjoyed an almost unexampled reputation in these diseases also.

A MARVELLOUS DISCOVERY.

After years of exhaustive study a chemist devised a means of supplying right at home a healing balsamic remedy that is even more effective in catarrhal diseases than the air of the pine woods. Of course, this remedy was copyrighted in every civilized country and was at once offered to the public under the name of "Catarrhozone." Its success has been phenomenal.

Just think of it! A healing, soothing substance capable of destroying those noxious organisms which excite and maintain disease. Capable, also, of allaying congestion and of stimulating the healing processes of nature, which are combined in that invaluable compound so well and so favorably known to the medical world as "Catarrhozone."

CATARRHOZONE CURES.

Catarrhozone is simply the concentrated qualities of the air of pine woods. If you breathe it you will derive more benefit in one hour than you could possibly get from the woods in a year.

This great advantage arises from the fact that, in addition to those healing emanations from pine, other ingredients distilled from the vegetable kingdom are so united as to give results that could not possibly be derived in the simple form in which nature supplies medicated air.

30,000 PHYSICIANS ENDORSE IT.

For all diseases of the nose, ear, throat, bronchial tubes and air passages—for catarrh in every form—cure is certain with Catarrhozone, which is not a nostrum, but a high-class scientific treatment. Large size, sufficient for two months' use (guaranteed), price $1.00; smaller size 50c, at all dealers or the Catarrhozone Company, Kingston, Ont.

THE JEWISH SABBATH.

Its Influence on the Habits of the Hebrew Children.

The Hebrew Sabbath, including its complicated preparations, is rich and impressive material for a child's imagination. On Thursday evening the mother already prepares dough, goes to market, cleans the fish, etc., says the American Hebrew.

In the morning comes the baking of "chales" (bread). How bewitching for a child to watch the mother making different shapes of dough, smearing it with egg and decorating it with braids of different shapes and forms. A Jewish child gets the first lesson in modeling by making make believe "chales."

In the evening the mother prepares to meet the Sabbath. The child partakes in the household occupations and therefore gets habits of industry, order and regard for the rights and ideas of others and the fundamental habit of subordinating his activities to the general interest of the household.

This is especially true in regard to Jewish households where everything seems to be prescribed by law. Before darkness sets in on Friday the housewife lights in the dining room extra candles or a special lamp in honor of Sabbath and reads the blessing.

Quite often a child not yet able to talk will cover its face with its little palms, imitating the gestures of the devoted mother. The returning from the synagogue, the appreciative greeting "Good Sabbath," the Kiddush, the blessing over wine, the special menu and the holiday spirit of all who participate have undoubtedly a soothing, beneficent influence upon the child. After supper the time is spent in resting.

FIRST SHAPE OF EELS.

Strait of Messina Revealed Mystery of the Snakelike Fish.

In the strait of Messina are channels of immense depth, through which a wild tide surges, and owing probably to irregularities at the bottom there are whirling eddies which have the effect of bringing up from the depths below many marine creatures which are rarely seen except in the deep sea trawls.

It was here that the larval form of a fresh water eel was first discovered, an incident which threw a blaze of light on the life history of a very mysterious fish.

All kinds of theories had been given forth with regard to the propagation of the eel. Some naturalists declared they bred in fresh water, others that they visited the estuaries for spawning purposes, but thanks to the discovery off Messina and later captures of the eel in its larval form it is practically certain that after mature eels drop down our rivers in autumn they lie there to exceedingly deep water in the sea and there deposit their eggs.

From the egg comes a little ribbon shaped creature, the larval form. In due course this changes into an eel of still smaller size, strange to say, and these small eels or elvers afterward ascend our rivers and there remain until they reach maturity, when they in their turn descend to the sea and history is repeated.—London Telegraph.

Horses in Literature.

In sacred writ it was deemed worthy of record that Solomon imported horses from Egypt, while the description of the war steed in Job is accounted one of the finest parts of that piece of literature. In Greek myth and English satire the qualities ascribed to Centaur and the Houyhnhnms testify sufficiently to the high regard in which the horse has ever been held. The name of Bucephalus is inseparably coupled with that of Alexander. At least one Roman emperor had divine honors paid to his charger. Who can picture Don Quixote sleeping on his armor without seeing the princely Rosinante tethered under the dewy night? And the stirring incidents of John Gilpin's ride conclusively proved that the racing blood of far removed equine ancestors was not entirely wanting in the degenerate descendant.

Intrinsically.

Constituent—What do you suppose Graphter is worth? Senator Lotsmun—I don't know what he's worth now. I bought him once when he was just starting out for $75 and a railway pass.

Doubt is born of the mind; faith is the daughter of the soul.—Emerson.

THE SHEEP ROMANCE.

Australia Produces Fine Wool For the Whole World.

There were sheep before Australia was known of, just as there were brave men before Agamemnon, but the fine wool sheep of to-day is practically an Australian production—one might almost say invention.

Australia started its national life as a reformatory. With the "First Fleet" of prisoners and their guards there went a few sheep. Unlike the human exiles, they were not sent out for reformation. Yet they were destined to found practically a new race of sheep, vastly more valuable than any that had gone before them.

The picked rams of the First Fleet would yield about 3 1-2 pounds of coarse wool. The picked ram of a first-class Australian stock to-day yields up to 40 pounds of fine wool, and the average yield of a decent flock is eight pounds per sheep. With this great increase in quantity there has been an even greater growth of quality. Australian merino wool is finer, more elastic, longer in staple than any wool ever dreamed of a century ago, and its production alone makes possible some of the exquisite fabrics which display the triumphant luxury of modern civilization.

Nearly 90,000,000 sheep are pastured in Australia to-day, and the pastoral industry brings to Australia's population of between four and four and a half millions some $126,000,000 a year—more than $28 a year for every man, woman, and child.

Of much more than Australian moment was the growth of this grand wool industry. It gave to England a new source of wealth. Before the days of Australia, Spain was looked upon as the only country in the world which could produce fine wool. Spain of that day was not willing that British looms should have any advantage of her production, and the British woollen manufacturing industry, confined to the use of coarser staples, languished.

Now, Australia—and Australia practically alone—produces the fine wool of the world; and if, in the course of any future developments, an Imperial Zollverein confined Australian wool to the mills of the Empire, a great part of the foreign production of fine clothes would perforce cease.

John MacArthur was the first wool prince of Australia, and as such deserves to be honored as one of the founders of the Commonwealth. From him stretch, in descent of industry though not of blood, a long line of big-hearted, big-brained men, who hide under the curious name of "squatters" the fact that they were, and are, the chief pillars of Australian prosperity, and the dominant types of Australian character.

The squatter earned his name from the fact that in the early days he pushed out with his flocks and herds beyond the borders of then known civilization, and "squatted" where he listed. His title to the land was his use of it. As settlement progressed, that free and easy method of occupying the country had to give way to more elaborated and not, in all cases, such satisfactory tenures. The squatter, however, remained still in title a squatter, though he was now a tenant of the crown on a long lease, or an actual freeholder by right of grant or purchase.

Vast are the areas now held by pastoralists in Australia. In the northern territory, where primitive conditions still rule, some of the runs are as big as the principality of Wales. Even in the more settled parts of Australia it is not uncommon for one man to hold up to a million acres of land for a cattle or sheep run.

Generous hospitality marks the Australian wool grower. The stranger within his gates may be assured of a lordly welcome, which stretches even to the loan or gift of fresh horses to resume his journey. This gracious custom of hospitality — born of the days when traveling was rare and difficult—now dies reluctantly as the railroad carries on its campaign against primitivism.

Erin's Attractions.

"We are only little ones, but we know Zam-Buk eased our pain and cured our sores. Perhaps it would cure you, too, if you tried it?"

Isn't this sound advice from "babes and sucklings?" Take it! The speakers are the children of Mrs. L. Webster, of Seymour St., Montreal, and the mother adds weight to their appeal. She says: "My little girl contracted scalp disease at school. Bad gatherings formed all over her head, and not only caused the child acute pain but made her very ill. The sores discharged, and occurring on the scalp we feared she would lose all her hair. She was in a pitiable plight when we tried Zam-Buk, but a few days' treatment with this balm gave her ease. Then the sores began to heal, and we continued the Zam-Buk treatment. In a short time she was quite healed.

"My little boy sustained a serious scald on the neck. It set up a bad sore, and quite a few things we tried failed to heal it or give him ease. Once more we turned to Zam-Buk, and we were not disappointed. It acted like a charm in drawing away the pain, and soon healed the wound."

Zam-Buk is "something different" in the way of balms. It contains powerful healing herbal essences, which, as soon as applied to skin diseases, kill off the germs and end the painful smarting. Other essences contained there so stimulate the cells that new healthy tissue is speedily formed. Eczema, itch, ulcers, cold sores, abscesses, festering sores, blood poisoning, chronic wounds, cold cracks, etc., are healed and cured in this way. Use it for all skin injuries and diseases. It is also of great service for piles. All druggists and stores at 50 cents box, or Zam-Buk Co., Toronto.

THE MODEL AT VIVON'S ATELIER.

An Incident That Ended In Her Leaving the Sky Parlor.

By IZOLA L. FORRESTER.

The model at Vivon's had fainted.

It was in the middle of the morning sitting, the very apex of intensity in the lesson. Little Vivon moved lightly and restlessly here and there from one easel to another, his small, black eyes mere high lights of sparkling eagerness under their heavy brows. He smoked his short, thick pipe and glanced from the charcoal studies to the slim white figure on the platform.

The sunlight poured full into the long, bare atelier. Suddenly the model swayed ever so slightly and sank to the floor.

Some of the girls gave quick, frightened cries, and Jean Laurier glanced up with a smothered exclamation of angry dismay over his unfinished sketch. From the first easel to the right of the platform the American student, Hal Crane, sprang to the platform and raised her head on his arm. It was such a young head. The loose, warm tinted hair lay softly against his shoulder, and he noticed for the first time how thin the small, piquant face was.

Vivon hopped excitedly the length of the room and waved his small plump hands for order.

"It is nothing," he said. "She is fatigued, it is so warm. Can you carry her, M. Crane?"

Could he carry her? Crane smiled grimly as he raised the slender figure in his arms. Why, his little sister Bess, back in Crawfordsville, Mo., was heavier than this. He followed Vivon from the atelier away from the battery of amused, curious eyes to the artist's private den.

"Ma foi," laughed petite Yvette, her eyes narrowing critically, "that was not bad, that last. I think I shall faint, too, and let le gros Crane waltz me off in his arms."

Laurier leaned lazily over her shoulder and scrawled a rough caricature on the corner of her paper.

"Like that?"

She boxed his ears soundly and reached a greedy little hand after the box of bonbons Elsie Ticot was passing. The model was forgotten.

"Lay her there." Vivon nodded to a corner divan in the inner studio heaped high with pillows, sketches and costumes. Crane ruthlessly pushed the latter off with his foot to make room for his burden. He laid her down gently and held to her lips the glass of water Vivon brought.

"It is just faintness, yes?" asked Vivon anxiously.

Crane stared thoughtfully at the white face among the pillows. He had been hungry once back in the first days of the battle. The little home in Crawfordsville had sent him out to the great city of his dreams, and only long afterward had the fight been his own. He thought he recognized the look that comes to those who are tracked by the wolf.

"I think that she's just about starved," he said bluntly. "Get some wine or something."

Vivon obeyed. The American had a way that made men obey.

"Who is she?" asked Crane when he had managed to get a few drops of wine between the pale lips.

"One of Ribaut's models," Vivon answered nervously. The sounds from the atelier were not conducive to peace of mind. Yes, she was a new one. Ribaut had sent her to him yesterday, and he had engaged her for the poise, the grace, the turn of the head, that line from the tip of the ear to the slope of the shoulder. She did not pose for the life classes, merely for drapery and the poise effective. And the name—it was in his notebook.

He took it out and read from the latest entries:

"Virginia Wilde."

"American?" asked Crane, using more wine as he saw a flutter of the eyelids.

"But, yes." Vivon shrugged his shoulders. "When they come over and are poor they must do something. Some are so proud they hide away and starve, and some put up the grand fight."

"Where does she live?"

Crane glanced up. The little artist had gone back to the atelier as a fresh crash sounded, with Yvette's peal of laughter ringing above it.

When the girl's eyelids opened he smiled down at her in a friendly fashion.

"Feel better?"

"I guess so." She hesitated and added, with a scared look in her dark blue eyes, "Did I faint in there?"

"Oh, yes; that was nothing! Lots do." Laurier had said the American had reduced cheerful lying to an art. "It's so hot there in the mornings, you know."

There was a quiver of hopeless disappointment around the curves of her mouth, and he knew what troubled her. There was a five franc piece in his pocket. He laid it unblushingly on the taboret beside her.

"Vivon said that was yours. He couldn't wait, but he said to come tomorrow, and this is for the two sittings."

Her eyes brightened with surprise, and he knew his surmise had been right.

"I must go home," she said, trying to rise from the cushions.

"Wait while I get a carriage." Crane started for the door decidedly. "I'll send one of the girls to help you."

She thanked him with a smile that made him whistle as he went down two flights three steps at a time. When he returned he carried her down to the carriage with a masterfulness that asked no permission, and she did not demur when he took the seat beside her.

It was not hard to find her "sky parlor," as Crane called it mentally, off the Rue des Coeurs Claires. He called there the next evening, and she met him at the head of the dusty landing with a shy dignity and led the way into her attic apartment as if it had been a Louis Quinze reception room in pink and gold. A young girl, younger even than herself, sat in an easy chair by the window and smiled up at him.

"This is Lucille, my sister," Virginia said simply. Crane's quick eyes noticed the slim pair of crutches leaning beside the chair. He knew why she had posed at Ribaut's and Vivon's, why she had not hidden her poverty and starved in silent pride.

The next time he came he brought flowers for Lucille, and a new, grateful friendliness flashed in the other's blue eyes.

It became a regular thing, that walk home from Vivon's to the Rue des Soeurs Claires. She showed him some of her sketches, and Crane promptly took a bunch under his arm and hawked them around the art stores with a devout persistency his own had never known. Before a month had passed she had picked up odd work coloring pen and ink proofs for one of the weeklies, and at last there came a day when she left Vivon's for good, and the future was full of hope.

"And we shall see, la-la-la; we shall see now," laughed Yvette. "He is in earnest, le gros Crane. The wedding bells will go ding-a-ling, and the little white faced Virginia will have roses in her cheeks."

"It's all your doing," Virginia told him that night when they parted at her door. "I was worn out and heartsick that day when I fainted, and you cheered me, and—and"— She faltered and held out her hand to him. There was a five franc piece in it. "Please take it back," she said. "Vivon told me, and I think it was just splendid of you."

Crane flushed hotly, but he took it. He knew her pride and that to her it was a debt of honor.

"And after today, what?" he asked. "I shall miss the walk home, and you will forget Vivon's and me."

She bent her head low over the bunch of pink roses he had given her for Lucille, and something in her silence gave him courage.

"Virginia, if you would only give me the right to sweep you and Lucille away from this, the sky parlor and the struggle that never ends! I'm strong and have gained a footing, and you could study then," he rambled on, with boyish helplessness. "I've loved you ever since that day at Vivon's when your head lay on my shoulder, and I wanted to lift you up and carry you away from it all—Laurier and Yvette and old Vivon and all of them. You seemed so different and little and alone."

She was silent still, and he waited. Out over the city some bells were ringing slow, sweet chimes, and the sparrows were fluttering sleepily around the eaves of the sky parlor over their heads.

One of the roses fell at her feet, and he raised it tenderly.

"Do you think I had better go?" The dark blue eyes looked up at him at last, and he bent toward her eagerly. "Virginia, sweetheart!"

She held the roses close to her lips and smiled at him over them.

"Won't you come up and tell Lucille?" she said softly, and he followed her up the long, dusty stairs to the sky parlor

WHITEWASHING COAL.

Not Done For the Sake of Neatness, but to Prevent Thefts.

Persons who have been somewhat astonished by having whitewashed coal delivered to them will be interested to know that the whitewashing is not done to improve the appearance or to increase the burning qualities. The treatment neither improves nor harms the fuel.

It is a detective scheme on the part of the railroads to locate and to prevent theft of the coal as it is hauled from the mines to the consumer. These depredations amount to thousands of tons annually, and the railroads are the sufferers, as it is up to them to deliver as many tons at their destination, often a thousand miles away, as were weighed in when the car was turned over for transportation.

Two or three tons may be removed from a carload containing forty tons without attracting attention to its decreased quantity until the car is again placed on the scales. To locate the loss, says Popular Mechanics, limewater is sprayed over a carload of coal. In a short time the water has evaporated, leaving a load of white coal. Then removal of any coal leaves a big black spot, which is quickly noticed by inspectors and station agents and the leak found and stopped.

A Nation of Borrowers.

Zanzibar appears, from a consular report, to be a place of universal borrowing. "Neither the Arab nor the Swahili," says the report, "has the slightest idea of thrift. The former, when he has sold his cloves, immediately spends the proceeds in entertaining or in the purchase of European articles for which he has little or no use. He then mortgages his property at a ruinous rate of interest or sells his next year's crop in advance at a price which would hardly pay for its harvesting, with the inevitable result that he is always up to his eyes in debt. The Swahili, if he happens to be out of debt at the beginning of the month, spends all his pay within a few days in food or native dances and has to beg, borrow or steal sufficient to maintain himself for the rest of the month. The money lender is in both cases the Indian, and the interest which he charges varies from 30 up to 300 per cent."

Managing a Servant.

One housewife declares that at last she has solved the servant problem. "Formerly I had untold trouble with my maids," she said. "They'd do well for a while, and then they'd deteriorate so that I simply couldn't keep them. So I hit on this plan: When I noticed a falling off in the last maid's work I went into the kitchen and told her that, in addition to her fixed wages, she should have 50 cents extra every week that she did well. When she was only fairly good I'd give her a quarter, but on the weeks when she displeased me she'd get nothing. Nine weeks out of ten she gets her half dollar. It pleases her immensely, and I find the plan well worth while in the better service it secures, me."

The Poet's Woe.

"I have always been a reader of your poetry," began Mrs. Gushe.

"I am glad," replied Algernon Charles Mystic, "that some one understands me."

"Oh, but that is what I have been hoping to meet you for. I wanted you to explain."

The Day of Rest.

"And now," said Mr. Fishbeck of Billville, "let us be thankful for one day of rest and get ready for church."

"Yes," said his wife; "run out and chop some wood and milk the cows and light the fire and make the coffee and wash the children while I bang my hair!"

A Better Test.

"I suppose," said the curious man to the customs inspector, "that you can tell by a man's face whether he is a smuggler or not."

The officer shook his head.

"I can tell a good deal better by his padding," he replied as he tapped an incoming citizen sharply on his bulging chest.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Scotland Yard examination which would be taxicab drivers have to undergo in the knowledge of London is no mere matter of form. "If," asked the inquisitor recently of a candidate, "a fare hails you in Trafalgar square and asks to be driven to Trafalgar square what would you do?" "I should drive him around a bit and drop him on the other side of the square," replied the candidate. And he was turned down, for he did not know that London has three Trafalgar squares besides the finest site in Europe—one in Camberwell, one in Chelsea and one in Stepney.—London Chronicle.

The LAST SHOT

THE DAY OF THE DUEL
(A True Story)

THE TEAMSTER HAD FALLEN BACKWARD AT THE LAST SHOT.

(Copyright, 1899, by the New York Herald Co. All Rights Reserved.)

THE couples were swinging through the last measures of the quadrille when a boy, white faced, breathless and spent with running, burst in at the door. He dodged along the side of the room past the little orchestra, his eyes fixed on two of the dancers at the further end. They stopped with the cessation of the music and the boy hurried up to them.

"Harris," he cried, catching at the sleeve of the youth who had just offered his arm to his partner; "Harris, look out! Ben Rudd's comin'. I was just down to the store and he said—he said 's how he was going to get you—here."

The young man faced about and the girl, who had heard the message, dropped her hand. The group stood alone on the floor, for the others had sought the sides of the hall. The boy looked up at Harris Lanier fearfully, anxiously. "Tain't no use tryin' to face him to-night," he added. "He's regin'. He don't care what he does, he's that mad. I run on ahead. He'll be here in a few minutes. You'd better go."

Lanier smiled nervously. He was a slight fellow, with just the trace of weakness in his chin; long limbed, yellow haired, boyishly handsome. His eyes sought the door while the youngster repeated his warning. The girl watched him with the trace of a curve to her lips. She might have been his own age, but there was the stamp of a firmer will upon her full, red mouth, the depth of a surer poise in her dark eyes. He turned from the door to her instinctively, with the gesture of one who looks for guidance. But there was no answer, none but the faint curve. Perhaps it was this that served to prompt him, for he flushed suddenly as if in shame for his hesitation.

"Don't worry, Tom," he said, with an assumption of easiness; "I guess I don't have to scurry from Ben Rudd or any one else."

"But, Harris," continued the boy, appealingly; "he's—he's mad. He said that you wasn't to ——. Well, he said you'd been told to stay away from Charlotte." He glanced defiantly at the girl. "And if you wouldn't he'd make you."

Harris clapped his younger friend on the shoulder with a laugh. "Let him come and try it, then." Gallantly he offered his arm once more and escorted the girl to a chair, taking one beside her. She kept curious watch upon him.

"I seem to be helping you to a deal of trouble, Harris," she said, softly. There was neither challenge nor encouragement in the full toned voice. He twisted at his silky first growth of mustache. He was no bravo, to ruffle it off before the woman with a boast and a laugh. His seminary training had deprived him of the roughly belligerent airs of the companions who had stayed at home. Recently returned among them when family reverses brought a sudden change in his plans, he had found their ways brutal and their ready badinage a source of discomfort. He had sought relief in the company of Charlotte Mastell, shunning the young men who had grown in a sturdier and hardier groove.

"I'm quite sure he's not my keeper, and I've never heard he was yours," answered Harris. It was not the strongest of answers, nor was it delivered with the masculine emphasis that any other of her admirers would have given to it.

Interest in Harris.

She was interested in Harris. He was different, gentler, more courteous, vastly superior in mental equipment to those she had known. He responded to something finer in her, a part of her nature and her training that no swain of them all in the little town had approached. But perhaps because she was a soldier's daughter, perhaps because she craved an iron strain in the man she could love, she had held him off, waiting, sounding, appraising, aware of a lack in him, unwilling to give her affection where it could not be commanded by respect.

His gaze was fixed again on the door and she followed it. At that moment, while the violins were tuning shrilly for the next number, it was thrust open and a man stepped inside. He was short, compact, with heavy shoulders and long arms. His face was flushed and he carried his jaw thrust forward at a predatory angle. With narrowed eyes he swept the hall and they came to rest in the corner where Lanier and Charlotte were sitting. He advanced toward them, slouching a trifle and paying no attention to the glances of surprise and amusement which his presence and his uncouth attire occasioned.

Coming to a halt directly in front of the couple, he removed his hat, not without a certain grace of movement, and bowed to the girl. He spoke in a low tone, inaudible to those sitting near, and maintained a casual and easy attitude. But his words were sharp and forceful.

"I promised I wouldn't let no papist priest elbow me out of the way, and I meant it," he said to Lanier without preamble. "You're in the wrong seat, my lucky, and you're goin' to git out of it."

Lanier returned his glare angrily. "Unless Miss Mastell has given you the right to arrange her friendships for her I cannot recognize your dictation," he said. "The only person from whom I can receive my dismissal is Miss Mastell herself."

Rudd grinned. Here was a novel retort and one quite appropriate to a spiritless, school bred pup. He wondered if Charlotte fully understood the implication. She was impassive, studying Lanier with an air of detachment. Rudd had never remonstrated with her for the apparent favor she had shown the returned student. He had bided his time, and this, as he saw it, was the time.

"My son," he said, with sudden good humor, "I ain't got no call to strip the hide off'n you. Run along while the weather's warm. We'll promise to let you go this time if you remember for about ten years that you're just a sprouter. You can't hold down a man's seat for some time to come."

Lanier felt as if the solid ground had been dug from under him. There was no hint, no encouragement in the grave eyes of the girl. In his experience he had never had to look forward to the necessity of brute assertion. He shrank from an encounter, from the shame and the pain it would entail. Rudd was a visitor from another world—strange threatening, incomprehensible. A certain self-pity calmed him as he considered his helplessness and wondered why Charlotte did not aid him.

"You are very annoying," he said, with some hesitation, querulously. "I have never interfered with you and I consider it quite—ungentlemanly on your part." He spoke the last phrase with difficulty, sensing the distinct offensive step it held.

The girl's face had taken on a vague tinge of pink and she drew away almost imperceptibly. Rudd was conscious of her detachment from Lanier and it cheered him mightily. He had expected at least a show of resistance. He had come prepared to throw the interloper out of the hall if necessary. But here was a better way. No master of finesse, he was still able to see that Lanier was injuring himself much more by his spineless tactics than he would by a losing but open fight. He laid one hand upon Lanier's arm. The gesture, to any observer, appeared merely casual and friendly. In fact, his strong hand closed upon the flesh of the younger man with a grip that almost wrenched a cry of anguish from him.

The Menace.

"Git," he said, smiling suavely. "This is as far as we go this time. If you want to begin again later just hoist the signal. I'll give you three minutes to leave the room."

His blue eyes held a fierce menace that crushed the unready Lanier. He stooped closer and closed the arm tighter. Lanier made a spasmodic effort to throw him off, but his arm could not move an inch under that mighty grasp. With one last, imploring glance at Charlotte and a sob in his throat, he slid from his seat. Rudd relaxed his hold and the cowed and beaten boy hurried out of the room.

With eyes blinded by tears Lanier made his way homeward, dazed, bewildered and only partly understanding the disaster that had overtaken him. The conviction that he had done an unspeakable, cowardly thing came to him slowly. There was the beginning of a revolt of manhood in him, but it was dim, confused. He had been reared in an atmosphere where violence was unknown, where the code of honor observed by the outside world was a matter undreamed of, where hate and passion and anger were emotions to be burnt and purged away. Under the enthusiasm and faith of his belief he had grown up like a child, and he could not see the power that had struck him.

He took his trouble to his uncle, the one member of his family remaining in the old plantation mansion after a series of domestic tragedies. The aged man had been his confidant and his playmate in boyhood, and on reaching home he told his story in a wild burst of helplessness. Smith Lanier heard him patiently through. The growing attachment to Charlotte he had already noted, the rest he could picture from the halting words of his nephew. He recognized in it the confirmation of his own fears, since the young man had been rudely dragged from a life for which his gifts and his education had fitted him. With no impatience, with no lack of sympathy, he gave his advice when the boy had finished.

"There is but one possible way, Harris," he said simply. "You must fight him."

Some such idea had presented itself to the young man, some instinct of struggle, some demand for personal combat to wipe out the stain that began to sear him. But physically he shrank from it, dreading it.

"How, uncle?" he asked. "I have never handled a weapon in my life and I know nothing of such things."

"It is not with weapons that I mean," returned the other slowly. "You are too young to handle sword or firearms. But you must abide by the primitive decision of boyish combat. It is the only way. Since you were able to walk you have heard the story of the Laniers and have seen the pictures of the many of that name that line the upper hall. Every one of them has abided by the arbitrament of the accepted code under which he lived, without fear or favor.

"It is greatly to be regretted that you were not turned out with the youngsters of the neighborhood while you were younger. I can see that now the method, even the thought of such a struggle, is strange to you. If you were of age I should consider you entitled to a formal meeting. As it is, you must stand up to him as boys do, with your hands, even though he should kill you."

The Jeer.

"I shall do as you say," returned Harris submissively.

Next morning the slender, neatly dressed figure walked with precise step down the street to the village store. Several of the young men who had attended the dance the night before passed Harris with wide grins and a jeer or two, for Rudd had not been able to keep the story of his achievement to himself. Harris gave no heed, but turned in at the door and walked straight to the counter. Rudd was standing behind the counter, leaning upon it, his strong, thick arms bare to the elbow. Harris noticed those arms. Loungers perched on boxes and barrels fell silent as he approached.

"Ben Rudd," said Harris in a steady voice, "when will you fight with me?"

Rudd stared at him in silence. The circle of loungers held their breath for a second. Then a spasm upon the broad face of Rudd started a gale of laughter through the store. It was a fine joke—a rare joke! Harris Lanier, the student, the frail exquisite, the youngster who had run away from a girl because he was bid, turned suddenly and demanded to know when the giant Rudd would fight him! Rudd himself was beyond speech for some minutes. Harris, with face that went first crimson and then white, stood waiting for his answer. In a lull he repeated his question.

"Why," roared Rudd, with sudden vehemence, "right now if you like. Have you said your prayers, my son? You'll need all your saints to stand by you now. Hey, Jerry, bring out some whiskey and burnt feathers. Some of you fellows take a shutter off'n one of them windows. There's goin' to be a fair imitation of a corpse on your hands in about five minutes."

Harris, taken sharply aback by the outburst and the strange orders, was given no time to interpose a word. Rudd, half laughing, half angry over the strange situation, set about the preliminaries with a show of furious impatience. Before his opponent was aware that the matter had been arranged he had marked a ring out back of the store and had appointed two seconds for each side.

The challenger felt as if a lurid, whirling storm had broken about him, holding promise of death. In a haze he knew that his coat had been stripped from him, his sleeves rolled up. Some one thrust him forward in the circle, and opposite him he saw the bellicose figure of Rudd. His antagonist was crouching with huge fists advanced. Mechanically he raised his own, trembling, impotent. For an instant he stood awkwardly. Then something crashed against his chin, throwing his head sharply back, and he staggered away, hands pressed upon his face. Another blow caught him on the ear, and ungoverned panic seized him, a mad desire to escape this cruel, bruising danger—a simple fear of pain. He gave before Rudd's next rush, broke through the circle and fled with the speed of terror up the street, pursued by the exultant whoopings of the loungers.

Smith Lanier was at the gate when his panting, wide eyed, disfigured nephew struggled up the hill to his home and threw himself on the lawn. The aged man tried to make Harris tell what had happened, but a newer and a greater shame had mingled with the cup of bitterness that the boy had tasted for the first time the night before, and he could not speak. The outline of the story, at least, needed no explaining, and Smith Lanier looked very grave and very old as he gazed down upon the last male child of his race. If there was a struggle in his heart no echo of it haunted his even voice as he made decision.

"Harris," he said, "war has come at last. The South needs every man born of her soil. You shall yet prove yourself one in her service. To-night we start for the city, where you enroll."

The Insult.

The ragged remnants of a Tennessee regiment were sprawled upon the gentle hill above Dalton, waiting for, yet hoping against, the order that should drive them on, weary, beaten, battle stained, before the triumphing cohorts of Sherman. All day and for many days the Confederate left wing, of which they were a part, commanded by General Polk, had been falling back toward Atlanta. Discipline had loosened under the strain of discouragement, wounds and losses, and the men had long since passed the stage where anything but the mechanical routine, marching, skirmishing, brief sleep and scant meals seemed to be part of life.

Some of them glanced up listlessly as a two gun battery came pounding and clanking down the road to wheel with a dash and spirit they had almost forgotten as military possibilities. The stout bodies of the cannon flashed sharply in the sun, the carriages were free from mud, the artillerymen were alert, with bronzed faces of health, well fed and groomed. A smartly uniformed officer rode beside the struggling team of the first gun as trim and martial as his own field pieces. The snappy little cortège would have been remarked in the pervading carelessness and dust of the retreat by any casual observer. But the few exhausted Tennesseeans who saw it turned away, again absorbed in the utter apathy of fatigue.

Urged by shouts and flailing whips the plunging horses took the slight rise at a gallop and swung on toward the rear of the division, sweeping about gallantly to take the turn in the road. Suddenly the officer snapped a sharp order and held up an imperative hand. Artillerymen flung themselves to the ground and caught at the bridles, the mounted men pulling in abruptly. The battery came straining and hammering to a halt just in time to avoid crashing into a commissary wagon that had drawn out across the road while the mules grazed placidly.

The young officer, spending a few energetic words upon the nearest Tennesseans, who had not thought it worth while to warn him, dashed forward to find that the driver of the wagon was sprawled upon his seat asleep. At a word four of his men lifted the careless teamster bodily and tossed him into the long grass, where he sat rubbing his eyes in dazed astonishment. Then they led aside the wagon and the battery prepared to proceed. As it got under way the teamster, finally aware of the situation, struggled to his feet and stood glowering. He was short, heavy set, with prognathous jaw and arms like the bulging roots of a tree. He said nothing, but the gaze of his bloodshot eyes was fixed with a strange light upon the officer. As he started past the latter turned and caught the glare. A wave of color swept his cheek and he reined in as the guns thundered by.

"I'll be back again, Ben Rudd," he said, and spurred on after his battery.

If any members of the Tennessee regiment had been capable of curiosity some fifteen minutes later they might have wondered to see the smartly uniformed artillery officer standing beyond a clump of bushes in conversation with the teamster.

"So you're a lieutenant now, eh?" Rudd was saying with a sneer. "Ain't nowayz different, though. Got your powder puff and lace handkerchief along?"

But Rudd was wrong. In the stalwart, rangy, exact young horseman who faced him there was little trace of the timid, undeveloped student of four years ago. Rudd was conscious of it, though his surly resentment would not acknowledge it. Lanier looked his old enemy over calmly before he made answer. If the other expected an assertion of authority as defence against the insult he was disappointed.

The Challenge.

"I didn't know you were with the army, Rudd," he said. "When did you leave home?"

"About a month after I walloped you," returned the other, readily.

"And—Charlotte?" asked Lanier.

"Guess you know better than I do," snarled the teamster. "I got another bone to pick with you there. I don't know what it was you said to her before you left, but she'd never so much as look at me afterward."

"I said nothing to her, Rudd," said Lanier quietly.

"You're a liar," snapped Rudd.

Again the Lieutenant's cheek crimsoned, but there was a new sparkle in his eye. "Look here," he said. "You put shame upon me once when I was too young and too inexperienced to understand. I've never ceased to look for every opportunity of wiping out that blot. I shouldn't have forced a quarrel with you in the field. We both owe our lives to the service. But I won't stand 'liar' from you or any other man. Will you fight?"

"You asked me that once before," answered Rudd, tauntingly. "You wouldn't ask me again if you didn't know you was safe. I may be only a teamster," he added bitterly, "but I'm a soldier. I can't fight against them." He pointed to the gold insignia of rank on the Lieutenant's sleeve and shoulder.

Without a moment's hesitation Lanier unbuckled his belt, took off his coat and tossed the garment from him. "Now will you fight?" he demanded fiercely.

"Yes," returned the other savagely.

"Bring a friend here in five minutes," said Lanier, turning away. "We'll have this thing out on the spot."

Lanier had some difficulty in persuading Lieutenant Flint, a camp acquaintance of his in a Georgia regiment posted further along the hill, that he could properly take part in an affair with a teamster. But after stating the case strongly he was able to show that the necessity outweighed all considerations of rank and Flint reluctantly consented. Returning to the rendezvous Lanier found that Rudd had obtained the aid of a sergeant in the Tennessee regiment. The extraordinary circumstances were recognized by the two seconds, who stepped aside without military formality to make the arrangements. It was agreed that the adversaries should meet with revolvers, at twelve paces, the regulation army six shooter to be used.

The little party of four made its way without attracting attention down the hill at the rear. About a quarter of a mile back of the line of encampment Flint pointed out a strip of level ground on the bank of a small stream, screened and hedged about on all sides from observation. The place was suitable and preparations were begun at once.

Lanier could not but note the contrast between his present sensations and the emotions that had shaken him during his former quarrel with Rudd. He was confident, calm, perfectly in control of himself, as he had learned to be on his first battlefield years before. He knew and had long known that his former weakness had been the result not of cowardice, not of any inherent taint, but of an almost childish lack of understanding.

Rudd, for his part, was aggressively eager for the conflict. His grievance lashed a dull hatred and envy of the man who had once been his easy victim and had risen so far above him in the hard test of warfare. He would not admit to himself that that rise had been due to anything more solid than favoritism.

The duellists, holding their loaded revolvers lowered, stood at their respective marks while Flint repeated the terms of the encounter.

The Last Shot.

"There will be ten counts between the words 'Fire!' and 'Stop!'" he said. "Neither combatant is to discharge his weapon before or after the signal, but is to fire at will between the words. Firing must cease if either is unable to keep his feet." After a pause he raised a hand.

"Are you ready?"

"Ready," they answered in the same breath.

"Fire! One, two"——

Both men had leveled their revolvers at the first word and at the second both fired. Lanier stayed his finger for an instant, but Rudd pulled his trigger four times in rapid succession. Through the puffing cloud of smoke the two watchers could see that Lanier still held himself erect and unharmed. Flint had gone on counting and his voice came clear after the quick explosions.

"Five!"

Lanier, with steady aim, poured his next four shots through a rift in the haze, reserving his last. Rudd did not falter.

"Seven, eight," came the monotonous count from Flint.

Then Rudd, lifting and levelling his weapon from his wrist with a determined gesture, sent his two remaining bullets flying across the field. Lanier started violently and tottered back a step. His extended arm wavered a moment.

"Ten! Fi"——

With a supreme effort Lanier pressed his trigger and the weapon spoke as he sank to the ground. Before the seconds reached him he raised himself a little and looked across at Rudd. The teamster had fallen backward at the last shot.

Lanier's right shoulder had been shattered, and as Flint examined it he marvelled that the Lieutenant had been able to hold his weapon after receiving the hurt. Simply, without bravado, Lanier answered that he would have fired the sixth time if his arm had been shot away. It was found that the final bullet had lodged in Rudd's body, close to the heart. The seconds agreed that he could not live more than a few minutes. Lanier's wound was severe but not fatal.

As they were about to start in search of the bugles announced that the weary troops on the hill were being aroused to a renewal of the retreat. Flint and the Tennessean sergeant, after rendering such hasty first services to their principals as they could, left to rejoin their regiments, promising to have an ambulance despatched that way to pick them up.

Rudd was breathing in painful, wheezing gasps. Lanier, taken with sudden pity for his enemy, made shift to crawl across the intervening space, bathing his useless right arm. With his handkerchief, which Flint had wetted in the brook, he bathed the hot, suffering, distorted face. Rudd rolled his eyes at the grateful touch and recognized his opponent. He stared for some minutes, uncomprehending. His breath came shorter, weaker. Death was hovering close to him.

"Harris," his lips formed the word. Lanier bent close above him to catch the message.

"She's waitin' for you. Go back—when it's all over—she's waitin'."

WILL NOT WITHDRAW CLAIM AGAINST SENATOR

Special to The Examiner.

Berlin, Ont., Dec. 6.—To the report that he will withdarw his claim to $1400 as preferred against Senator Rath, Mr. Absolom Merner, son of former Senator Samuel Merner, this morning gave emphatic denial. Claim is a peculiar one. Mr. Merner avers that Senator Rath, having received assurance of appointment to senate upon resignation of Samuel Merner, advised him that if he induced his father to resign Mr. Rath would pay $1400 on May 1st, 1909, and $1000 on each succeeding May 1, as long as Senator Merner or his wife lived. Senator Merner did not resign and now his son is claiming $1400 which has not been paid. The case will likely be called to-morotw.

KING DISGUISED AS LABOURER TO LEARN PEOPLE'S WISHES

Gustave of Sweden Spends a Day in Navvy's Clothes Hustling Freight—Says He Has Learned a Great Deal and Proposes to Continue—His Action as Result of Recent Strike.

WAS NOT RECOGNIZED

Stockholm, Dec. 6.—King Gustave on Saturday inaugurated a new departure for sovereigns. Disguised as a stevedore, he spent most of the day carrying sacks of coal from a lighter.

In an interview, after it was all over, the King said that this was only the beginning. He intended to mix with all classes of laborers, so that he might ascertain their opinions and wishes.

Already, he added, he had obtained many valuable hints from the men with whom he worked.

The determination of King Gustave to learn of the conditions of the workingmen by taking part in their labors, resulted from the recent great tie-up of business life of the country by a general strike. King Gustave intervened last August, in an endeavor to secure a compromise, but without avail.

The strike continued for months and involved thousands of men, the employers' association paying $40,000 daily to support its weaker members, while the trades unions and other workingmen's associations exhausted their entire funds to keep the strikers from starving.

Eventually arbitration was undertaken by the Swedish Government to settle the dispute, and in the interim many of the workmen returned to their tasks, although the number of unemployed remained very great. King Gustave, the Queen and other members of the royal family, as well as the Cabinet Ministers, contributed to a national fund, which was raised by subscription for the purpose of providing loans to the working classes. Homesteads have already been apportioned among the unemployed, but conditions remained such as to cause His Majesty and his Government grave anxiety.

The King found difficulty in ascertaining the real facts, and during the past week or two has made arrangements to join various craftsmen and laborers at their work, and in such a guise that they would not recognize him.

WildSpeeches Made By The Budget Supporters In England

What Promises to be Bitter Campaign Has Been Commenced---Liberals Carry Turnip on Stick in Derision of Peers---Socialists Outdone by the Vehemence of the Great Trafalgar Square Meeting.

London, Dec. 6.—The whole of Great Britain is immersed in the political campaign. The country is divided into two great camps, composed of those who support the Lords' action in refusing to consent to the budget and those who contend that the House of Commons must have absolute control of the finances of the nation. There were, of course, many other issues, such as tariff reform versus free trade, but these are being pushed into the background by the conflict between the two Houses.

The dates of the chief political events of the next two months are now definitely known. Dissolution is on Jan. 8, the first borough elections Jan. 13, the first county elections Jan. 19, and the elections Jan. 31. The first meeting of the new Parliament is on Feb. 14.

While the local organisations are busy selecting candidates, the leaders of the great parties are carrying on a general campaign. The Radicals, who had long foreseen the fate of their finance bill, are not allowing the grass to grow under their feet.

In London Saturday afternoon, one of their organisations, the National Democratic League, held in protest against the action of the Lords, one of the most notable demonstrations ever seen in the metropolis. Fully 20,000 persons, mostly the laboring and artisan classes, gathered in Trafalgar Square, and cheered the Radical speakers, who condemned in unmeasured terms the members of the Upper Chamber.

The early divergent note here, as elsewhere, came from the suffragists, who after a term of comparative quiet again started to indulge in attempts to break up the Radical meetings. The Trafalgar Square crowd, however, was too great for their efforts to have any effect. They were more successful at Southport, where by climbing to a roof and shouting through the skylight, they succeeded in interrupting Winston Spencer Churchill's meeting, and at Leith, where, aided by roughs, they created a diversion by attempting to storm a meeting, which Sir Edward Grey, the Foreign Secretary, was addressing.

Foiled by the Leith police, who charged the crowd with batons, the women got their revenge by hurling bricks through the windows of the public buildings. Secretary Grey, whose speech was not interrupted to any extent, spoke strongly for the reformation of the Upper Chambet.

Mr. Churchill was able to conclude his speech, and, undaunted by this experience, held a meeting at Liverpool in the evening, in continuation of his Lancashire campaign. He ridiculed the idea that the old-age pensions and the navy could be paid for by the adoption of tariff reform, and referred to Mr. Balfour's offer to assist cotton-growing in the empire as very old, in view of the fact that the Unionists when in power, although asked to do something in this direction, took no action.

In the course of his speech Mr. Churchill said: "We are face to face with a period when parties necessarily are grouped on violent lines, when brute force and class hatred, instead of forbearance and public spirit, are becoming the characteristics of British political life."

Lewis Harcourt compared the present issues with those of the time of Cromwell and the French revolution.

Sir Edward Grey, in his address at Leith, said that he was glad that the House of Lords was barred from retreat, and that there would be no opportunity for repentance.

The Liberal peer, Lord Lyvedon, described the Lords as rebels against the crown.

The speeches by men like the Foreign Secretary, who has hitherto been regarded as representing the staidest Whiggism, and Lewis Harcourt, whose immaculate attire has carped for him the reputation of "Dandy of the House of Commons," indicate the nature of the political fight, which has now begun, and is reflected in the speeches of the demonstrators in Trafalgar Square as published in the Sunday papers.

The Trafalgar Square speeches were quite equal to the wildest utterances of any socialist demonstrations in that historic spot. Dr. Clisford, the revered leader of the free church, hoped that the peers would be drowned in the Red Sea as was Pharoah.

William P. Byles, member of the House of Commons from Salforth North, said: "We have got the Lords by the throat and are going to strangle them. If the men of England have the same spirit as they had three hundred years ago they will be ready for civil war."

The favorite emblem of the demonstrators was a turnip carved to represent an imbecile face stuck on a pole and surmounted by a coronet, with the words beneath: "The first born."

The crowds made a hostile demonstration before the Constitutional Club and cheered at Premier Asquith's residence. They then made for the Lansdowne house, which was guarded by the police and broke up quietly.

The Conservative Sunday Times, describing the scenes in Trafalgar Square, says that there is no use attempting to belittle the demonstration. The fifty speakers included a dozen of the members of the House of Commons. The size of the gathering, which was arranged at short notice, says the paper, was surprising. It was unmistakably the most notable and most effective demonstration in recent years.

Witness In The Guthrie Case Was Located In Peterborough

Miss Clara Guthrie Arraigned on Charge of Arson and Remanded for a Week—Herbert McDougall Says He Knows Nothing of Mr. and Mrs. Guthrie.

MOTHER'S DISAPPEARANCE

Barrie, Dec. 5.—Following up the verdict of the Coroner's jury, the Crown yesterday had Miss Clara Guthrie arraigned before Judge Wisner on a charge of arson. In the absence of her lawyer, Mr. Boys, Miss Guthrie declined to elect. She was remanded for a week.

The young woman does not seem much worried over the situation. In connection with the absence of Mrs. Guthrie, whose secret departure from town caused the withdrawal of bail and the imprisonment of her daughter, it should be pointed out that she is quite within her rights in leaving town, as her bond does not require her to appear before December 14th, when the County Court opens.

Herbert McDougall, who lived with the Guthries, and who disappeared during the investigation after part of his evidence was given, came back to town yesterday afternoon, the police having located him in Peterborough. He says he was in Peterborough all the time, but had not heard that he was wanted in Barrie. Asked regarding Mr. and Mrs. Guthrie, he said he did not see either in Peterborough, nor did he know their whereabouts. While he talked at some length regarding the inquest, he disclosed little information of value.

CONFINED FOR LIFE IN AN ASYLUM

John Dillon, Montreal Murderer, Will Spend Rest of His Days in An Asylum for the Insane.

Examiner Special.

Ottawa, Dec. 5.—An order in Council was passed at yesterday's meeting of the Cabinet Council commuting the death sentence passed on John Dillon, the eccentric Montreal book agent, who killed a policeman last summer, to life imprisonment in the asylum for the criminal insane. The alienists who examined Dillon last week reported to the Minister of Justice that Dillon was insane. Dillon, it will be remembered, was reprieved by the order of the court only a few hours before the time fixed for his execution.

A GOOD SHOWING.

Canada is helping Hon. Mr. Fielding, Finance Minister, to come up smiling with the budget one of these days. The Dominion revenue for the eight months of the unexpired fiscal year shows an advance of nearly ten million dollars—$9,541,273—over the corresponding period of 1908-9. At the same time the expenditure shows a falling off and so far the revenue has balanced expenditure in spite of the devotion of fifteen million dollars to the National Transcontinental railway. While the revenue was about nine and a half millions greater the expenditure was about four millions less in the period mentioned. It is expected that Mr. Fielding will be able to announce a big surplus when he brings down the budget.

FRAZIL AND ANCHOR ICE.

Though of no particular interest in this summery weather, the distinction between "anchor ice" and "frazil" will become of importance before long in connection with the operation of water power machinery. In order to be able to speak by the book and avoid saying or writing "frazil" when one means "anchor ice" and vice versa, the distinction made by Mr. John Murphy, an Ottawa electrical engineer, should be remembered.

In a recent address he pointed out that "anchor ice forms on rocks at the head of a stream. Frazil forms at the surface. Anchor ice will even form on the rock on the outer face of a water-fall and it will remain clinging to these rocks, in spite of the washing-off force of the water falling against them, until such time as the heat of the sun makes the ice release its hold. Frazil forms most prolifically in rapids. It will also form upon the surface of any body of water—such as a lake or canal—if the water surface is disturbed by any cause which retards or prevents sheet ice from forming."

When the waterworks cease to work and the electric generators fail to supply light, it will be some comfort and convenience to know whether to charge the interruption of service to anchor ice or frazil account.

A DOUBLE LESSON.

Experience has demonstrated with almost mathematical exactitude that farm drainage pays; that it increases the yield per acre. Seasonable, seeding, and, as a rule, that means in Ontario, early seeding, one of the conditions of a good crop, is possible on well-drained land; and this, combined with other favourable conditions, induced by drainage, results in far greater yields and consequently better profits. Not only does drainage improve lands capable of yielding crops, but it makes possible the growing of crops on lands that, without it, are not worth the trouble of cultivating at all. Competent authorities assert that, from neglect of drainage, the farmers of the province lose millions of dollars annually, or, to put it another way, they do not gain millions in the shape of crop returns, which they might do, if they had proper drainage. The cost need not deter any farmer from undertaking so beneficial a work. The cost is, according to conditions, from $15 to $40 per acre. If the farmer has not the ready money, statutory provision makes it possible to borrow the money through the townships in which he lives, on easy terms of repayment—$7.36 per year on every hundred so borrowed. This has been worked out to show that from an expenditure of $1.84 per acre the farmer can, on the average, get an increased crop return of the value of from $16 to $30 per acre.

While facts like these are a lesson to the farmer, urban municipalities like Peterborough, might also take the lesson to heart. The best road-making authorities declare that good drainage is the foundation principle of good streets and roadways. Without it permanent streets, which are the only kind of street improvement that should be aimed at, are impossible. It has repeatedly been asserted, there is no city in Ontario that lends itself so readily to either surface, or sub-surface drainage as Peterborough, and it is also safe to say that in no city in Ontario is drainage so neglected in practice. What makes the wonder is that the street authorities not only neglect street drainage, but actually permit, if they do not actually create obstruction to material drainage. Thus the first condition of permanent work on our streets is neglected. Superadd to this neglect, the violation of every principle of road-making in other respects—careless grading, unsuitable material improperly applied, and we have conditions in connection with our street administration, that absolutely forbid the attainment of anything approaching permanency, and, besides represent a continuous, and, in the aggregate, enormous waste of the money of the ratepayers, who, after being compelled to pay extravagant taxes for alleged street construction and improvement, are compelled to use streets that are inconceivably bad, especially in comparison with the money that has been expended upon them.

There is a double lesson—to the farmers and the city dwellers—in the incontestable advantage of drainage; and to the latter is to be added the fact that effective streetdrainage will obviate the necessity of a good deal of the annual drainage of the ratepayers' pockets; or if it does not do that, it will result in the Peterborough taxpayer getting value for the rate he pays, which nobody will begrudge.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The noble six hundred—peers—are making their last charge upon the people of Great Britain. Will the ballot of the ballots be their Balaklava?

Our evening contemporary who has the Canadian independence bee in its bonnet, is not quite without blame itself. It shows a decided independence of veracity, consistency and common sense.

Some of the little Canadians in the Conservative ranks who advocate a donation of Canadian money to Great Britain for expenditure upon the navy as a contribution to imperial defence, are travelling in distinguished company—the House of Lords. This august and irresponsible body has declared the constitutional heresy of denying to the power that raises money by taxation the sole decision as to its disposition. It is quite as unconstitutional in spirit to alienate the money paid by the taxpayers of Canada, and deprive the latter of a voice in its expenditure, which would be done by sending Canadian money to be spent on the Imperial navy. Under British rule the peoples' taxes cannot be spent by anybody but themselves.

POLITICAL STRAWS.

(The Globe.)

Two Provinces of the Dominion are believed to be on the eve of their general elections—Nova Scotia and Manitoba. Recent bye-elections there have accordingly more than common interest. In Nova Scotia four took place in one day. The Government carried three out of the four. In one of them the new Attorney-General, Mr. A. K. Maclean increased the majority from 100 to 500. The Liberals are naturally jubilant at this testimony to the continued strength and popularity of the Murray Government.

In Manitoba an election took place the other day in Birtle. The constituency has been represented by Mr. Mickle, lately elevated to the Bench. Mr. Mickle was a candidate of exceptional strength, and as it was impossible to get a successor of equal acceptability to carry the Liberal banner, Hon. Robert Rogers determined to capture the constituency as a happy prelude to the general Provincial election. He descended on the constituency with all the "human" means of which he is master.

The well-known tendency of constituencies in bye-elections and the paucity in numbers of the Liberal Opposition encouraged hm to make the attempt. To the honour of the electors of Birtle it must be recorded that he utterly failed, the Liberal candidate being elected by a good, substantial majority.

The Conservative Press has been so busy with the result in British Columbia that it has had no time to study these political events.

But Hon. Mr. Roblin, Premier of Manitoba, will do a good deal of thinking over it. It seems that he hasn't much chance to be in the running with Hon. Dicky McBride for the reversion of the Dominion leadership of the Conservative party. Both are railway premiers, but Mr. McBride's triumph is so fresh that he seems to have all the better chance.

COUGHED ALL NIGHT

Till This Recipe Was Tried. Cure Followed in 5 Hours.

A prominent medical man who suffered with a severe cough and cold on the lungs, often being kept awake all night, and weakened by loss of sleep, finally discovered a simple formula which will cure any cough in five hours by the clock. It is a laxative tonic cough syrup which can be made at home by anyone and the formula is here given for the benefit of those who pass sleepless night in painful paroxysms. Those who have tried it say it is magical, and beats any high-priced, slow-acting cough medicine ever sold.

Mix a bottle one-half ounce fluid wild cherry bark, one ounce compound essence cardiol and three ounces syrup white pine compound. Take twenty drops every half hour for four hours. Then take one-half to one teaspoonful three or four times a day. This will tone up and rid the system of deep-seated coughs every time.

PROBLEM OF SLEEPLESSNESS

What keeps you from sleeping as you should at night?

Perhaps worry, perhaps fear, perhaps grief, or it may be prolonged mental effort, excitement, social dissipation, coffee, tea, alcohol — these last three intemperately used—indigestion, neuralgia, arterial disease, eye strain or dental lesion.

There is no specific for insomnia. Drugs work merely for the time being. Also, drugs offset by reaction in the morning the benefits of the night before.

Dr. Lyman P. Powell remembers one case in his clinic in which morphia administered to a woman took away the power of sleep at all. On the other hand, he has known of relief being brought by the stomach specialist, the oculist, the dentist, the throat specialist.

In his little book, "The Art of Natural Sleep" (Putnams), Dr. Powell gives some general hints for self-treatment for sleeplessness.

The habit of deep breathing from the diaphragm must be developed and be regularly practised both indoors and out. This alone sufficed in one complicated case to bring sleep every night.

Tea and coffee, save for the morning meal, must be eliminated in almost every case.

The hot bath sometimes brings sleep by relieving the congestion of the brain, but contraction of the blood vessels often follows with such promptness that the hot water bottle applied to the feet or the back of the neck, is likely to be of more service.

When sleeplessness is due to mental strain alone the cure can be effected through the quiet mind—which is not always easy to obtain.

"For many a subject to insomnia the most that can apparently be done is to stand cheerfully and confidently between him and the temptation to grow morbid and melancholy, to keep the house as quiet as circumstances will allow, to provide for the bedtime hour a glass of hot milk with its pinch of salt in it, the hot malted milk unsweetened, the clam bouillon, the beef extract, or a cup of cocoa which every insomniast take before he goes to bed, and by day and night to soothe, sustain and cheer the troubled spirit."

Dr. Learned's method with insomnia is quoted by Dr. Powell—a treatment designed "to shift the belt of attention from the whirling wheel of introspection to the steadier wheel the will revolves."

So surely has Dr. Learned in recent years become convinced that the problem is usually psychical that he no longer emphasizes physical exercises in or out of bed. Instead he provides an ingenious little tablet on which the wakeful one with uplifted pencil steadily records in waving lines his inhalations and his exhalations until at last, fatigued by the long exercise, the brain becomes anaemic and sleep overtakes the drowsy mind.

Muscular relaxation and rhythmic breathing are recommended as aids to sleep, and Dr. Powell describes thus the treatment on these lines given by Dr. Emily Noble, the patient in mind being a man:

"She bids him lie upon his back on a hard surface, with head turned to one side in order to relieve the tension on the muscles of the neck, with arms extended at right angles, with the palms turned up with the feet turned out and spread for comfort at least a foot apart.

"The lungs are then to be cleared of their static air by a few deep inhalations, made through the left nostril, because in the average man it seems to furnish a freer channel for the air than the right nostril.

"Next the insomniast settles down to lighter rhythmic breathing, which is nothing but the consequence of the conscious effort to make each exhalation equal to each inhalation. He should take the "breath in as gently as the fog creeps in from the sea, He should let it out 'as the air goes out of little children"s balloons when it is allowed to escape.'

"As with experience all feeling of conscious effort passes, he will have a sense of letting go, the muscles will of their own accord relax, the quiet mind will come, especially if a pleasant thought be held steadily before it, the insomniast will stretch and yawn, take instinctively the sleep position and pass off into a dreamless sleep."

YOUR BLOOD IS POISONED

If You Suffer From Headaches or Neuralgia.

Frequent attacks of Headaches or Neuralgia are Nature's warnings of Blood-Poisoning. The pain is due simply to the tortured nerves, inflamed by the blood being overloaded with impurities, because of inactive bowels, kidneys or skin.

There is usually chronic Constipation and the foul matter, instead of passing from the body, is absorbed by the blood. The kidneys are not as strong as they should be and fail to filter from the the blood, the necessary amount of impure matter.

Instead of the skin throwing off one and a half pounds of waste matter every day, it becomes inactive and does only half its work, leaving three quarters of a pound of this waste to poison the body. Headache powders and pain killers simply numb the nerves and have no helpful action on the organs causing this poisoning of the blood. To cure Headaches and Neuralgia, the blood must be purified, which can be done only by making the kidneys, bowels and skin healthy and active.

"Fruit-a-tives", made from concentrated and intensified fruit juice, is the greatest blood purifying medicine.

"Fruit-a-tives", or "Fruit Liver Tablets", is a scientific cure for Headaches and Neuralgia, and never fails to cure because "Fruit-a-tives" stops the cause of these troubles.

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, or trial box, 25c. At dealers or from Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

ADVERTISE in The Examiner.

ANOTHER LETTER FROM MR. LASTAR

This letter and any others that may follow, under the signature of Mr. Lastar, are independent of any other party or parties, and are paid for by him for their insertion.

To the Editor of The Examiner:

After reading the editorial of the local option campaign under the heading of Last Minute Arguments" which says "If one thing has been more clearly shown than another in the present campaign it has been the fact that the opponents of local option do not believe in the potency of any arguments they may have to advance against its adoption. Notwithstanding invitations in this column and the frequently expressed desire on the part of many private citizens that they should give the public either through the press or otherwise the benefit of any light they may have, they have resolutely abstained from doing so. There can be but one conclusion, that they have nothing to present to the public that will carry weight or that cannot be effectually replied to. This is a point for the public to keep clearly in mind. Anything that will not stand the test of fair discussion is of no value and should be so treated."

How dare those black coated monsters in the disguise of preachers publish such lies? Have they not been asked and challenged for a fair discussion? Has not Reverend Mr. Potter stated publicly that he will answer my questions, although senseless as he took them, in due time? He made an excuse, "I could not read them." Have I not published those questions in plain English and in the face of this he had the audacity to publish such a letter in the public papers? He did publish the fake challenge to blindfold the public to make it appear that they are not afraid of any free controversy and one of their own supporters has stated in a speaker's address that the town has only $5,000 from the hotelkeepers. Then I stood up and told him with the exception of about $142,000 in wages. The speaker asked me who paid that sum, I answered "the employers for their honest work," and when I asked him who paid in Warsaw, which is a local option town, for over 30 barrels of beer, then they send for the Chief and expel me from the meeting. In the first place I ask the Chief, after their challenge openly in the papers in Saturday's issue and as the speaker asked me voluntarily the question on his own accord who pays for them, by what authority did he act in expelling me from the meeting? that is a public meeting and everybody invited to argue through the press or otherwise. What does that mean? is that not open fraud and misrepresentation? Instead they should have arrested the whole bunch on the platform for open misrepresentation and suspended the meeting. He just expelled me, although I was in full right to ask and argue with them according to their advertisement. For this, Mr. Chief Hosel you will have to answer in the proper place. I will not let even you take my right away from me, and I hope that in the near future we will have it there in the city so that not even a Chief should be allowed to go further than the law allows him and to obey the law with everybody, rich or poor. Then I ask the general public: "Will you stand for such a bluffing as is going on by those preachers during this campaign?" Can they really blindfold you by their preachers' coats with their cowardly hearts. Why they had advertised this great preacher and were the whole bunch of them on the platform themselves, and after challenging the people in general to argue with them, at the first question they run to the police for protection? Why they are a disgrace to the community. If they only take the lecture which has been given them by Mr. Drum which I must say was a very true and good one in regard to morality, then all you temperance workers should have been gone long ago to the hot place for trying to bring local option in the city, and forcing the poor people to the temptation of perjury, immorality and drunkenness a hundred times more than they are when the laws would be strictly enforced. Well, you think by expelling me from the meeting you won a great victory. Now I say that I proved to the people in general that you are crooked and cowards, and I will tell you one thing, that I begin to feel in me the fighting spirit of old, when it refers for the benefit of the poor, and therefore I am taking the fight single-handed against all you black-hearted monsters. You dare not face me on the platform in a fair discussion and let me tell you that I will find you with my pen just as hard if not harder. So long as I can help I will not let the poor class be robbed even by preachers of their privileges and their rights which have been given to them by the constitution and the government, as everyone should be equal by law, not with your hypocritical ways as presenting yourselves as saviours of the poor people and letting every rich man who can afford it have intoxicating drinks in clubs or private houses at wholesale prices, while the poor man when he should need a drop of whiskey for his health or a bottle of ale or porter for his sick wife must go to the drug store and pay, not as they are paying now, 5c., but 50c. because that will be medicine. I see all your tricks in the game and be sure the people will be fully advised before the third of January. Now about the audacity of that yesterday's speaker. He said himself nobody knows where and at what the temperance man of the day is aiming. In their jealous greed they let themselves be carried away farther than they should. He had the cheek to make a lie before the whole audience when he would not give an answer to my question, that I was paid by the hotel men for my writing and my supporting them. Let me tell him that while he might sell even his soul for money by giving his dirty speeches, I defy anybody. I will give nobody right to make such statements that I am getting paid for what I am doing, although indirectly the hotelkeepers will benefit by my opposing the local option. But my aim is not the hotelkeeper, but the poor man in general. The real state of affairs in the loss to the city in manual labour and financially will come in the next letter. B. LASTAR.

To the Mayor and Council of the City of Peterborough.

Gentlemen,—Having been a citizen and property owner of the city for about seven years and as I would like to see the city and its inhabitants prosper, and as you know what interest I am taking in the present local option campaign, which was instigated by a small number of irresponsible citizens, who, with all kinds of misrepresentations, have succeeded in bringing the question before the people to vote upon the local option by-law, and as all during the time since they started their campaign by bringing in here all kinds of outside speakers who have been throwing all kinds of slander and dirt on all citizens by comparing us to the meanest and lowest class of people where life and property are not safe, and where the moral standing is a disgrace, and as they have every Saturday in their literature challenged everybody to come and ask questions which they will, in the interest of the public, answer and prove their right cause, and as I have seen that they are making publicly under the mask of preachers of the Holy Gospel, false misrepresentations, I have challenged them at my own expense, and asked permission in the interest of the people of the city. I was at first ignored, and even last week they have made a statement before the public that they will answer in due time, and as they only last Saturday, after my letters and proof, which were absolutely undeniable, had the audacity again in their literature in the public papers to say and try to blindfold the people in saying that no anti-local man has dared although they have invited them through the press and by private ways and challenge anyone to come forward and argue with them in the interest of the public, I therefore took it for granted what they said was true, and as I only made a remark, although led by one of their own men, at first, I was with the help of the police, expelled.

I therefore appeal to you gentlemen, as men who were intructed by all the citizens, to look after the welfare of the city, and whatever your opinion about local option may be, you are the men to look after the welfare of the city without partiality to any party, and as yourselves, in conjunction with the Board of Trade, had a meeting lately, and came to the conclusion that it would pay to spend $3,000 a year if you could only succeed in getting one manufacturing concern in two years, which would pay the city only for the reason of seeing the city larger and prosper better, and here, at the same time, we are given by just a small number of people by ways not fair, the most absurd and shameful one-sided, under the mask of the protection of the church, and are trying to take the bread of 200 working people, and about 265 who are dependent on them to make their living under the excuse that they will save the poor people they are actually forcing the poor, as experience has shown us, to more drunkenness, immoral life and perjury at a time if they only wanted, to be sensible and really help the poor they could try what has already been proved a success, namely the T. A. S., without any inconvenience to anybody.

I therefore ask you, not in favour of any hotel keeper, but in the name of the majority of all the working class of people, to call a meeting, presided over by the Mayor, in whom we all have the fullest confidence of impartiality. Let all your aldermen give their ideas, without fear, that they may lose a few votes, by expressing their opinion. Call a few speakers, who are favouring local option, and who know Peterborough, and a few who are against it, and let us discuss the matter from both sides, and whatever the opinion will be given by the speakers the people of Peterborough will be given a chance to see both sides of the question, and will act accordingly.

Hoping that you will see the matter in the same light.

Yours truly,

B. LASTAR.

MISS JULIA CHOATE PLEASES HASTINGS

The concert in the town hall on Friday evening was a grand success in every particular, and the large house in attendance, not only had the satisfaction of helping a most worthy cause, but in feeling that they had been amply repaid by the concert alone.

Miss Julia Choate, violinist of Peterborough, was, of course, the main attraction on the programme, and she was well supported by the remaining artists. Miss Choate's playing has always been something which Hastings audiences never seem to get enough of, and we hope before many seasons go by to hear some of her pupils here, who cannot help absorb some of the tenchnique of the violin from studying with such a teacher. Her numbers were varied and chosen to suit almost any lover of music. The intermezzo from Cavalirn Rusticana being especially well received.—Hastings Star.

ZAM-BUK ENDS ITS AGONY.

The aching and the agony of rheumatism is relieved as soon as Zam-Buk's soothing ingredients reach the seat of the trouble. Just rub Zam-Buk well in over the muscles affected and get ease!

Mr. P. C. Wells, of 322 Ogden Street Fort William, says:—

"I had rheumatism in both knees and in my left arm, and shoulder. The pain got so bad that I could no longer work and was under the doctor on three different occasions for several weeks.

"I seemed to get little, if any, better, no matter what I tried, and this was my state when Zam-Buk was recommended to me. I laid in a supply, and to my great joy it began to cure me. I rubbed it well in, every night, and when a few boxes had been used found I was free from the pain and stiffness of rheumatism.

Zam-Buk is just as good for sciatica, neuralgia, etc. When used as a balm it need not be rubbed in, but just applied. It heals cold sores, cuts, ulcers, abscesses, eczema, and all skin injuries and diseases. Fifty cents, all Druggists and Stores, or Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price.

ONE ON THE DRUMMER

A good story is going the rounds about a drummer and a pretty waitress. Here is what happened according to report:

The dapper little travelling man glanced up at the pretty waitress—"Nice day, little one," he began.

"Yes it is" she answered "and so was yesterday and my name is Ella and I know I'm a little peach, and have pretty blue eyes, and I've been here quite a while and like the place, and I don't think I'm too nice a girl to be working in a hotel; if I did I'd quit my job; and my wages are satisfactory; and I don't know if there is a show or dance in town to-night, and if there is I shall not go with you, and I'm from the country, and I'm a respectable girl, and my brother is cook in this hotel, and he weighs 200 pounds and last week he wiped up this dining room floor with a fresh $50 a-month travelling man who tried to make a date with me. Now, what'll you have?"

The dapper little travelling man said he was not very hungry ,and a cup of coffee and some hot cakes would do.

HANDICAPPED

This is the Case With Many Peterborough People.

Too many Peterborough citizens are handicapped with a bad back. The unceasing pain causes constant misery, making work a burden and stooping or lifting an impossibility. The back aches at night, preventing refreshing rest, and in the morning is stiff and lame. Plasters and liniments may give relief, but cannot reach the cause. To eliminate the pains and aches you must cure the kidneys.

Booth's Kidney Pills cure sick kidneys and cure them permanently. Can you doubt Peterborough evidence.

DON'T SPOIL THE BOY

Many parents who think they love their children are in reality their greatest enemies. They bring out the worst that is in them because they appeal to the worst. They appeal to the frail, weak, timid and unlovable in their nature, by catering to their selfishness, indulging every whim—no matter how unreasonable or vicious—by doing everything for them, instead of allowing them to do things for themselves and thus strengthen their faculties and power of self-reliance.

They are allowed to stay home from school when they 'play' sick, as so many children do, and are petted and coddled and fussed over, when there is really nothing the matter with them. If they fall or hurt themselves they are sympathized with and encouraged to cry, by expressions of pity instead of being taught to bear a little pain or hurt bravely and manfully and not to whimper like a weakling.

In a hundred such ways weak, foolish parents cultivate the selfishness of their children until they become unbearable; they destroy their courage and self-reliance; make cowards and weaklings of them and pave the way for their destruction.

Many men and women have lived to curse in bitterness of heart the weak, criminal indulgence of overfond parents, who were the primal cause of their ruin.

Do not do for your children what they ought to do for themselves, but help them to help themselves. Do not allow them to trample on the rights of others in order to satisfy their own selfish desires. Show them the beauty of the Golden Rule, and insist upon their practising it in their games, with their playmates and with older people. Teach them to respect the rights of others; and don't forget that they also have rights which should be respected.

Lifebuoy Soap is delightfully refreshing for bath or toilet. For washing underclothing it is unequalled. Cleanses and purifies.

HOTELKEEPERS OFFICERS OF THE PEOPLE WHO GRANT THEM LICENSES

Rev. Dr. Small's Address to a Crowded Opera House — Denounced Liquor in the Strongest Terms — Liquor Dealers are Nothing More Than Assistant Tax Collectors.

A ROUSING MEETING

"I was once a captive of the galling strains of strong drink, but when I came out of the midst of it and found the rock of salvation, in gratitude to God, I wanted to release the many sterling youths and the strong men who were yet within its grasp," said Rev. Sam. Small last night to a crowded Opera House. His lecture on "Personal Liberty" in connection with the local option campaign proved decidedly interesting and in dealing with the liquor question showed that he was well acquainted with it, admitting that for a number of years in his early life he had been a victim to its curse. He speaks in most outspoken, unmistakable words and being a man of great personal magnetism holds the undivided attention of his hearers.

After the singing of a number of hymns, Mr. H. P. Kennedy, who occupied the chair, gave some reasons why he intended, as a business man, to vote for local option. He had travelled a great deal and had seen much of the evil of strong drink. He knew of business men who owed their ruin and downfall to drinking.

DR. SMALL'S ADDRESS

The speaker of the evening at the outset, stated that it was his intention to give some good and sufficient reasons why the liquor traffic should be abolished, not only in Peterborough but throughout this great Dominion and he began by giving a very apt illustration. "Into the market place of an Oriental city one day," he said, "there strolled a stranger. He saw a number of gilded cages, each of which contained a bird, that to him, seemed to flutter about in vainless effort to be free. The stranger purchased the cages, opening them one by one until all the winged cratures had their freedom. The stranger had been once a captive himself and knew what it was to be free." The speaker said that it was the same way with the liquor evil. It was their duty to release the hundreds of men who were held in the throes of strong drink.

"I do not deliver temperance lectures," Dr. Small continued. "One never knows which way a temperance man is going. I remember being in Sandusky, Ohio, at one time when the National Brewers' Congress was meeting there. They passed a resolution to this effect. 'Be it resolved that we stand as the apostles of temperance.' The makers of the evil were standing as examples of temperance. There is a good deal of ignorance and prejudice in regard to the reform movement. The liquor man doesn't see why his business should be interfered with. The sale of liquor is a licensed evil and not a business. The liquor traffic has always been run under special statutes. The man who sells shoes gives something for value received. The hotelman leaves his customer nothing but a craving appetite. I sympathize with the man that has that awful appetite. There are men who say "I don't give much for the one who can't take a drink and leave it alone." These are the ones who never leave it alone. I drank until my little children shrank from a staggering father.

The drunkard carries home to his wife and family misery, hunger and disgrace. That is what he gets in exchange for what he leaves at the "booze foundry." Hotelkeepers live under a special privilege from the people. They can't vote themselves in. They are simply licensed purveyors. The liquor shops belong to the people, the keepers being nothing more than volunteers who look after the citizens' places. Everyone that holds a license is as much an official as your mayor or council. The city allows these places for $5,000 a year. Is there not common sense enough in the town to drive out the devil and his gang?"

At this juncture Mr. B. Lastar broke in on the speaker and told him that $49,000 in wages, to two hundred and thrty employees was spent in Peterborough.

"Whose money is it and where do you get it?" asked Dr. Small.

"It is money earned," Mr. Lastar answered.

Mr. Lastar questioned the speaker as to who was carrying the large quantities of liquor to a small place like Warsaw where local option was in force to which Rev. Mr. Small replied that there were always a certain number of "lawless devils" who defied the law made for their own protection.

Prohibition prohibited, he remarked where the officers of the law were faithful to their oath.

The speaker took occasion to refer to the attitude of newspapers in regard to local option. "You can't depend on them," he said. I know they don't always stick to the truth because I edited one myself for twenty years."

In conclusion, Dr. Small pointed out that the liquor traffic must go and urged everyone on the third of January to mark the ballots for local option.

COULD NOT KEEP THIS SECRET

"Six months ago I was cured of piles by the use of Dr. Chase's Ointment," writes Mrs. G. A. Swayze, Copenhagen, Elgin Co., Ont. "I had been afflicted for over thirty years and tried all sorts of treatments in vain, so I was surprised and delighted to be cured. I don't care for publicity but would like to tell every one suffering from piles about Dr. Chase's Ointment."

THE MEANEST MAN IN THIS CITY THE ONE WHO REJECTS CURE FOR SIN

Mr. R. Drum, International Secretary of the Y. M. C. A., Delivered Stirring Address to Mass Meeting of Men in the Grand Opera House Yesterday---Spoke of the Evils of Strong Drink and Impurity.

"Who is the meanest man in Peterborough might give rise to a large and varied range of answers and when it was announced that International Secretary Drum of the Y. M. C. A. would speak in answer to that question there was naturally considerable speculation as to what his answer would be. Yesterday afternoon, before a large mass meeting of men at the Grand Opera House he gave it in direct and impressive language and in his very convincing and earnest manner gave some advice of a most invaluable character.

Mr. Drum spoke against the drink habit in strongest terms and said the people of the city were to be congratulated for what they were doing to blot out the traffic. Referring to the point so often advanced of a man being unwilling to be deprived of his glass of beer by restrictive measures he said that any should be willing to sacrifice his glass to save mankind. In the religion of Christ personal sacrifice was called for.

The speaker left no doubt as to his disgust of the liquor traffic, but in referring to its bearing, in relation to the men engaged in it, to the subject of the address, stated that the bartender, the saloonkeeper, or the men who went there were not necessarily the meanest men.

There was a greater evil in the world than drink. That was impurity. This awful sin is tearing at our vitality. While it was a greater evil than drink there was no doubt that drink contributed toward it.

With this marked sincerity of manner and in outspoken terms he told of the awfulness of impurity and of the trail of sorrow and misery it left in its wake. If men were the only sufferers it would not be so bad, but the shame of it was that innocent ones had to suffer also for the impurity and viciousness of husbands and fathers. It was the products of impurity and intemperance that filled our asylums and alms houses. The speaker made a very significant remark when he said:

"If the doctors diagnosed the diseases of women properly there would be more divorce cases than there were to-day."

Mr. Drum dealt with various forms of impurity and condemned them all in the most unsparing fashion, speaking scathingly of the common, but altogether erroneous saying that "A man must sow his wild oats." Vile and impure stories, especially told in the presence of young boys, were included in the category and the speaker said if he had his way he would isolate the tellers of such tales as beings unfit to be received in decent society. "If any man defileth the temple of God, him shall God destroy," and the image of God dwelt in us all.

The answer to "who is the meanest man?" was "the man who rejected the cure for sin, the belief in Jesus Christ." The reason men went to hell was because they would not accept God's plan of salvation.

Deer Are Plentiful Now Near Gull And Bottle Lakes

While the past deer-hunting season was generally considered to be one of the worst in years, the same runaways that were deserted six or seven weeks ago are now well worn by large numbers of the antlered monarchs. Mr. O. Hunter, who has been repairing a number of dams in the vicinity of Gull and Bottle Lakes, states that they are now very plentiful and he has seen them crossing in numbers below the dam in Gull Lake. It will not give the hunters any satisfaction to know that the deer are numerous now that the season is closed. The question is where did they go? for several of the Peterborough parties made their headquarters at Gull and Bottle Lakes.

WHAT MIGHT HAVE BEEN

Canal From Port Hope to Rice Lake Was First Proposed in 1834 and Act Was Passed Incorporating Company Which Failed to Carry Out the Work.

In 1834 there was an act passed authorizing the construction of a canal between Port Hope and Rice Lake. From this fact it is evident that the people of this district three quarters of a century ago had ideas greatly in advance of the time. Some dreamer recognized the possibilities of such a waterway imparted his enthusiasm to others, secured the passing of the act and then came to a halt. Trenton would never have been on the Trent Canal had the early residents carried out this canal scheme to Port Hope. Mr. F. D. Kerr called the attention of a reporter to this act in Chapter 30 in the fourth year in the reign of William IV., passed March 6th, 1834, incorporating the Port Hope and Rice Lake Canal Company. It was required of the company that they should complete the work in seven years otherwise their charter would fe forfeited. Had the canal been completed at the end of the seven years stated it would now have been in use 68 years. This is another example of history repeating itself. The fathers of the Trent Canal system will hardly say that it was originated in 1834, and yet the Port Hope-Rice Lake link is one of the most important links along the canal route. Had it been completed it is safe to say that it would have meant a great deal ftr Rice Lake as a summer resort for Americans and Peterborough would have received many benefits. If it had—but then the plan was not carried out and in all probability never wil.

Salvation Army Temple Is Re-opened And Dedicated

Ceremonies Began Saturday Night and Terminate With Banquet To-night--Hon. J. R. Stratton, M. P., Presided Saturday Night and Mayor Rush on Sunday Afternoon---Large Attendance---Review of Meetings.

The formal re-opening and dedication of the Salvation Army on Simcoe St., which commenced Saturday night and continued throughout the Sunday services has been an occasion of repoicing for the members of the Peterborough corps and its faithful officers and undoubtedly marks the beginning of a new era in the Army's endeavours in this city. The public services during the past two days have been featured not only by the presence of some of the foremost officers of the Salvation Army in Canada, but also by a number of Peterborough's leading citizens who, sympathizing with the good work this organization has accomplished, graciously accepted an invitation to attend the re-opening ceremonies. Staff Captain Walton the officer in charge of the local corps has been assisted by Lieut.-Col. Gaskins, Field Secretary for Canada and Newfoundland, a speaker of exceptional ability, Brigadier Hargrave, Brigadier Divisional officer for Eastern Ontario and Quebec, and Capt. S. A. Church of "The Young Soldier," the Salvation Army Sunday School publication. Everything in connection with the return of the corps to its former quarters has been a gratifying success and the conclusion of the re-opening will be celebrated this evening by a banquet, followed by a concert. The meetings have all been well attended and on the part of the members of the Army an evident feeling of pleasure and satisfaction has been manifested. This, the visiting officers hoped, would be maintained and the renewed zeal and fervour would result in even more fruitful work in the future.

Saturday Evening.

The first service since the alterations were begun was held on Saturday night, The hall resplendent and fresh from the decorator's hands after the changes had been made, was filled with an enthusiastic gathering glad to be "back home again," as Staff Captain Walton expressed it. After Brigadier Hargrave had conducted the opening of the service he congratulated the local corps upon the undertaking of renovating their hall and upon the despatch with which the work had been carried out. He felt confident that greater work would now be done for God's glory, and hoped it would not be long until it was found necessary to again enlarge the building. He then introduced the chairman of the evening, Hon. J. R. Stratton, M.P., who he said he knew had been a good friend of the Army and had materially assisted the Peterborough corps in its faithful efforts.

The Chairman's Address.

Mr. Stratton was given a very cordial reception on rising to reply.

He said that in his public capacity during the past quarter of a century as representative he had been frequently called upon to preside on public occasions like the present and he could frankly assert that he did not know of any other organisation that it gave him greater pleasure to assist than the Salvation Army. He had watched with pleasure and interest the character, extent and growth of its noble work in Peterborough and elsewhere. He was almost tempted to endorse the remark made to him the other day by a gentleman connected with one of our most prominent churches. He said: "The Salvation Army is doing more good than all the churches."

While that may be, and doubtless is an extreme view, it is fully appreciated by those not connected with the Army, that a good work is being successfully carried on by the Army and the statement is true, if applied to the fact that the Salvation Army reaches and raises a human element that the churches do not reach because they have no machinery, no methods for reaching them,.

He had long admired the work of the Army because there are many living monuments of its work. He had observed considerable of the work being done. He could well remember the first introduction of the Army in this now flourishing city. It had grown and had been assisted by an appreciative public until it had outgrown the former gathering places. He had noticed that:

Drunkards had been made sober;
Homes made happy;
Moral wrecks rescued;
The hungry had been fed;
The naked had been clothed;
The fallen raised.

And all this was the kind of work the founder of Christianity did while He was on earth, the work of true Christianity.

He pointed out that to accomplish this work there was a need of means. In addition to the self-sacrificing human instruments, there must be a centre, a rallying point, a home.

This was represented by this splendidly equipped and renovated building.. It had been a labour of love for the members of the Army who have worked for it. It had been a recognition of this labour of love that has led the public to assist and you are met together to rejoice over the beginning of the end of accomplishment. Mr. Stratton congratulated the Army on its new and commodious quarters. He had been through the building. The basement for Sunday School work was well arranged. The officers' quarters and band room were well adapted for the work, the main entrance had been modernized and the assembly room greatly enlarged and improved. He congratulated the city of Peterborough in having such a splendid centre of high influence and moral uplift in this growing city. He hoped that the Army's expectations would be fully realized not only spiritually but financially.

Judge Huycke.

The chairman, Mr. Stratton, said they had with them a gentleman, a new resident of Peterborough, who, it was known had always been interested in all good works in Cobourg, and who was recognized as a good friend of the Army. Mr.Stratton was pleased to have the opportunity of introducing to the audience His Honour Judge Huycke.

His Honour thereupon took the platform and stated that he was pleased to be with them that evening. He had always endeavoured to do what he could to better humanity, to uplift the fallen and had even gone so far as to help to bring the sinners to repentance. He knew the Army had done a good work in Cobourg. The officers of the corps in that town had always been his friends. Since he had removed from Cobourg the Army officers had been removed so that Cobourg had lost some of its good citizens, Judge Huycke humourously remarked. He congratulated the Peterborough corps upon the good appearance of their new Barracks. The increased accommodation the hall provided would be none too large and the basement would provide splendid accommodation for the Sunday School classes. The band of the Army provided good music. With the soldiers and the band they could not help but attract the attention of those who required the assistance from the work of the Army. He wished them every success. He was glad to be with them upon this occasion and trusted that the meetings to follow in connection with the dedicatory services would be even more successful.

A special vote of thanks was voted to the chairman. In making the motion Staff Captain Walton stated that Hon. Mr. Stratton had always been a friend of the Army. He was a practical and substantial friend. He had already given them $200 towards the building fund and had contributed an additional $50 on the present occasion.

A vote of thanks was also passed to the visiting officers of the Army and to the good friends who had so generously asisted.

Sunday Afternoon.

Another public meeting was held on Sunday afternoon and again the Temple was thronged. To His Worship Mayor Rush fell the honour of presiding as chairman. In his remarks he congratulated the Army upon the splendid building they now had at their disposal and hoped they would continue the good work they had achieved in the past. He especially mentioned the work of the officers in charge who had undertaken the task of financing the alterations. He encouraged the members of the Army to persevere in their work which was appreciated by the people of Peterborough. Among the other visiting gentlemen on the platform were Ald. Morgan, Duncan, Morrow, Gillespie and Metheral, Chief Rossel and Chief Howard, all of whom briefly referred to the Salvation Army's influence for good, and the work they had accomplished. Congratulations were also extended to the local corps upon the improvements in the Temple. Sergt. Major R. C. Braund, Superintendent of the Sunday School, spoke at some length upon the efforts and the hopes of that department and upon the fact that the Salvation Army pays special attention to the children. The speaker of the afternoon was Col. Gaskins whose words of advice were listened to with rapt attention.

To Be DYSPEPTIC Is To Be MISERABLE.

Dyspepsia is the prevailing malady of civilized life. It is largely due to gross errors in diet, over-eating, too free indulgence in stimulants and over-taxing the stomach with indigestible food, eating too rapidly without chewing the food sufficiently, indulging in hot biscuits, pastry, pickles, confectionery, etc.

Burdock Blood Bitters has an established reputation, extending over thirty-four years, as a positive cure for dyspepsia in all its forms, and from all diseases arising from it.

Can Eat Anything Now.

Mrs. Herman Dickenson, Benton, N.B., writes: "I have used Burdock Blood Bitters and find that few medicines can give such relief in dyspepsia and stomach troubles. I was troubled for a number of years with dyspepsia and could get no relief until I tried Burdock Blood Bitters. I took three bottles and became cured and I can now eat anything without it hurting me. I will highly recommend it to all who are troubled with stomach trouble."

FIREMEN'S SUITS

Have Been Handed Over to the Men for Use—New Outfits Look Well.

The firemen have received their new uniforms for the year and are looking like so many Berry Walls. The suits were made by Snider & Hickey, and in the words of one of the men, are "some class." They give every satisfaction in style, and fressiness, and have met with the approval of the members of the Fire, Water and Light Committee, who inspected them on Saturday night. There was some delay in getting the suits this year, owing to a breakdown in the mill where the goods are manufactured.

NO INDIGESTION OR STOMACH DISORDER

No Gas, Heartburn, Headache or Dyspepsia Five Minutes Later.

Why not get some now—this moment, and forever rid yourself of stomach trouble and indigestion? A dieted stomach gets the blues and grumbles. Give it a good eat, then take Pape's Diapepsin to start the digestive juice working. There will be no dyspepsia or belching of gas, or eructations of undigested food; no feeling like a lump of lead in the stomach or heartburn, sick headache and dissiness and your food will not ferment and poison your breath with nauseous odours.

Pape's Diapepsin costs only 50 cents for a large case at any drug store here, and will relieve the most obstinate case of indigestion and upset stomach in five minutes.

There is nothing else better to take Gas from stomach and cleanse the stomach and intestines and besides one single dose will digest and prepare for assimilation into the blood all your food the same as the sound, healthy stomach would do it.

When dispepsin works your stomach rests—gets itself in order, cleans up—and then you feel like eating when you come to the table and what you eat will do you good.

Absolute relief from all stomach misery is waiting for you as soon as you decide to take a little Diapepsin. Tell your druggist that you want Pape's Diapepsin because you want to become thoroughly cured this time.

Remember if your stomach feels out of order and uncomfortable now you can get relief in five minutes.

LEAVES THE PRINCESS

Miss Ethel Wenlock, Soloist There, Has Returned to Her Home in Toronto.

Miss Ethel Wenlock, who has since the opening of the Princess theatre, been the soloist there, left yesterday for her home in Toronto, having severed her connection with the Princess. During her residence in Peterborough she made many friends, who will regret her departure from the city. She is a contralto singer of much ability and her singing of illustrated songs has been one of the most popular features in connection with the excellent programmes given at the Princess.

Miss Nellie Hallihan has temporarily taken Miss Wenlock's place as soloist at the Princess and her many friends will welcome this opportunity of hearing the clever little local singer.

TUPPER TO R. L. BORDEN

Sir Charles Says He Cannot Understand the Demand For Dreadnoughts When the Experts Favor a Canadian Fleet—Government's Compact Must Be Put Through at All Costs, Says Former Chief.

Ottawa, Dec. 6.—The following letter has been addressed by Sir Chas. Tupper, who is in England, to R. L. Borden, leader of the Opposition, in which he discusses the question of the Canadian navy:

"My dear Mr. Borden,—I have read with much interest the communication of the Canadian correspondent of The Times on naval defence in today's issue of that paper. I regard that question as more important than any mere party issue and am glad to learn that you are resolved to maintain the patriotic attitude of the Conservative party assumed last session.

"A few years ago, when Canada was struggling to open up for British settlement, the great granary of the world, a few gentlemen here raised the question of a Canadian contribution to the imperial navy. I joined issue with them and was sustained by the press and public opinion. It was admitted that Canada was not only no burden to the Mother Country, but with her harbors and coal mines on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts England would require a larger navy.

"Contrast the progress of Canada, Australia and New Zealand under imperial management and since it was relinquished, and it will be seen to whom their present importance is due.

"In an evil hour for the British Empire Cobdenism was allowed to sweep away the protection policy which had made England mistress of the manufactures of the world and place all her colonies in the position of foreigners.

"Read the result in The Times of Oct. 3, 1849: 'The reversal of the ancient policy of Great Britain, whereby she withdrew from the colonies their wonted protection in her markets, has produced the most disastrous effects upon Canada. In surveying the actual condition of the country what but ruin or rapid decay meets the eye? • • • While the adjoining states are covered with a network of thriving railways, Canada possesses but three lines, which, together scarcely exceed fifty miles in length, and the stock in two of which is held at a depreciation of from 50 to 80 per cent., a fatal symptom of the terror overspreading the land.'

"The confederation of Canada, which has resulted in such gigantic progress, was the work of Canadians, and regarded by many English statesmen as a prelude to getting rid of responsibility. Regarding as I do British institutions as giving greater security to life, property and liberty than any other form of Government, I have devoted more than half a century to unceasing efforts to preserve the connection of Canada and the crown.

"When Great Britain was involved in the struggle in the Transvaal I led the van in forcing the Canadian Government to send aid. But I did not believe then, and I do not believe now, in taxation without representation. The demand which will soon be made by some that Canada should contribute to the imperial navy in proportion to population, I regard as preposterous and dangerous. I read with pleasure the resolution passed unanimously by the House of Commons, which pledged Parliament to proceed vigorously with the construction of the Canadian navy and to support England in every emergency and all [illegible], in my opinion is required, is to hold the Government of the day bound to carry that out honestly.

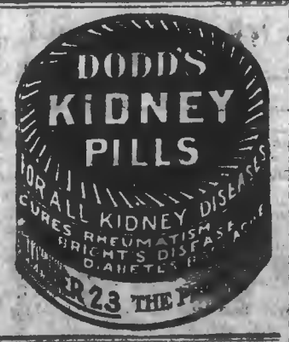
"I do not forget that all parties in the United States agree in the desire to obtain possession of Canada. Under existing circumstances it is of immense importance to have Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his party committed to the policy which secured the unanimous consent of the House of Commons on a question of such vital importance and a great responsibility will rest upon those who disturb that compact.

"I cannot understand the demand for Dreadnoughts in the face of the fact that the Admiralty and British Government have determined that it was not the best mode of maintaining the security of the Empire and arranged with Canada and Australia (the latter of whom had offered one or two Dreadnoughts) for the construction of local navies to keep open the trade routes in case of war.

"All difficulty as to the question of autonomy is now removed, as it is fully recognized that the great outlying portions of the Empire are sister nations, and that means are adopted to secure uniformity in the naval forces of the Empire, in the design and construction of the ships, and the training of the officers and men. They are also to be interchangeable, and thus secure uniformity in every respect, so as to act as effective units with the British navy.

"Of course, the Government of the day will be held accountable for carrying out the policy thus agreed upon in a thoroughly effective manner, but I cannot avoid thinking that a fearful responsibility will rest upon those who disturb or distroy the compact entered into on this vitally important question. Yours faithfully,

"Charles Tupper."



MOTHERS SHOULD KNOW.

The troubles with multitudes of girls is want of proper nourishment and enough of it. Now-a-days they call this condition by the frenched name of Anemia. But words change no facts. There are thousands of girls of this kind anywhere between childhood and young ladyhood. Disease finds most of its victims among them. They are too weak and frail to resist. Some of them are passing through the mysterious changes which lead up to maturity and need especial watchfulness and care. Alas, how many break down at this critical period; the story of such losses is the saddest in the history of home. The proper treatment might have saved most of these household treasures, if the mothers had only known of and given it to their daughters they would have grown to be strong and healthy women. It is palatable as honey and contains all the curative properties of pure Cod Liver Oil, extracted by us from fresh cod livers, combined with the Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites and the Extracts of Malt and Wild Cherry. Search the world over and you will find nothing to equal it. Taken before meals it improves the nutritive value of ordinary foods by making them easier to assimilate, and has carried hope and good cheer into thousands of darkened homes. Dr. Charles Curtis says: "Your preparation is a sure cure for the most violent cold, if properly taken. In treating children, it has proved in many cases under our observation a sure preventive of the progress of pulmonary affections, and has in every case of incipient consumption acted as a stay of that dreadful disease." The more it is used the less will be the ravages of disease from infancy to old age. It is both a food and a medicine,—modern, scientific and effective from the first dose. "There is no doubt about it." Sold by chemists throughout the world.—Warne Drug Co.

Hospital Slandered.

Brantford, Dec. 6.—Ald. Geo. A. Ward appeared before the hospital board Saturday to substantiate certain charges he had made in the City Council of a general nature against the medical profession of this city in connection with operations at the hospital.

The alderman refused to make a specific charge or to give the name of his informer, and the board passed a resolution regretting that the hospital had been slandered without cause.

"No. 300" Is Closed.

New York, Dec. 6—No. 300 Mulberry street, officially passed into history yesterday when the police department deserted the famous old building to occupy its new $5,000,000 home in Centre street. With the possible exception of Scotland Yard, No. 300 Mulberry street was the pulsating centre of more great crime mysteries than any other spot in the world.

French Liner Storm Battered.

Halifax, N.S., Dec. 6—After fighting her way through hurricane weather for eleven days, the big French liner Mexico, bound from New Orleans for Havre, put into port yesterday with empty bunkers, her coal supply having become exhausted. She proceeded to-day on her voyage.

HEAVY DAMAGE DONE.

Scores of Wrecks Are Reported From St. John's, Nfld.

St. John's, Nfld., Dec. 6.—A vivid idea of the disaster wrought by what the oldest residents along the west shore assert as Newfoundland's greatest storm, which has driven scores of fine schooners ashore, among the three hailing from Gloucester, Mass., the fishermen's Clintonia, Henry M. Stanley and Mabel R. Hines, is given in late despatches from Birchy Cove.

The Clintonia is fast ashore at Woods' Island, where she is pounding heavily. When the ship's anchor had parted, Capt. Norman Ross and his crew made their perilous way ashore through surf flung masthigh from the cliffs.

After a terrific struggle with the tempest, the Stanley, Capt. Arsenault, was driven ashore at North Arm, Bay of Islands, where she is fast breaking up. For hours her crew were forced to cling to the hull, at the mercy of wind and wave, the tremendous seas making it impossible to launch a boat. Finally, during a lull in the storm, they were taken off by heroic volunteers from the shore and were taken to Birchy Cove by the cruiser Fiona.

The Mabel B. Hines went ashore at nearly the same place and now lies on her beam ends, with great seas continually breaking over her. Her captain and crew managed to reach the beach in their own boat. The entire western coast is littered with wreckage from the uncounted Newfoundland schooners breaking up in the arms and coves along the coast.

Reports from the south coast also indicate great losses in shipping.

Civil Service Wants More Money.

Ottawa, Dec. 6.—Deputations representing the Civil Service Federation of Canada, the other the Civil Service Association of Ottawa, waited on Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Hon. Sydney Fisher on Saturday. The representatives of the Civil Service Federation presented to the Minister a memorandum urging the Government to extend the provisions of the Civil Service Act to the outside service, to increase the scale of pay, and to inaugurate a system of superannuation for the benefit of the outside service.

The inside civil service presented a memorial asking for an improvement in the sanitary conditions of some of the buildings in which the civil servants work, and that the superannuation of the civil servants be re-established.

The Ministers said that the matter of the extension of the Civil Service Act to the outside service was engaging the attention of the Government. The desirability of a scheme of superannuation being applied to the service was also recognized.

Bishop Goodsell Dead.

New York, Dec. 6.—Rev. Dr. David Ayers Goodsell, resident bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, died yesterday at his residence in this city. Bishop Goodsell had been ill several weeks, and death followed an operation for a carbuncle from which he had suffered greatly.

Dr. Goodsell was born at Newburgh, New York, in 1840, and entered the ministry in 1864. From 1890 to 1892 he was literary editor for The Christian Advocate. In the latter year he was elected bishop by the general conference, three years later was appointed resident bishop of New York City, to succeed the late Bishop Fowler. He celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of his ordination to the ministry last year.

Suicides Beside Friend's Body.

Vancouver, B.C., Dec. 6.—An unusual tragedy happened in an undertaker's morgue yesterday. A well-dressed Japanese, speaking good English, named Hamomoto, called and asked to see the unidentified victims of last Sunday's accident at Kilby, when twenty Japanese laborers were killed.

Hamomoto evidently recognized one of the dead, and asked to see the effects of the dead man. These were produced, including a loaded revolver. Without a word, his face torn by grief, the man picked up his dead friend's gun, and placing the muzzle in his mouth fired, and died instantly beside his dead comrade.

Carvell Sees Kidnapped Kelley.

Portland, Me., Dec. 6.—F. B. Carvell, M.P., of Woodstock, N.B., is here to-day seeing Kelley, an alleged New Brunswick smuggler, who claims he was kidnapped by police after being lured closed to the U. S. border.

Carvell conferred with the U. S. district attorney on the matter, which may become one of international controversy.

In the House of Commons last week, Carvell brought the matter to the attention of the Government.

First Train Over New Route.

Ottawa, Dec. 6—The first train over the newly-completed section of the Canadian Northern Railroad between Quebec and Ottawa, arrived yesterday with 500 on board. This new route is twenty-six miles shorter than the C.P.R. or G.T.R. A beautiful stretch of country along the Ottawa River, hitherto, almost unknown, is thus opened up. The depot on the banks of the Rideau River is only temporary.

Woman's Power Over Man

Woman's most glorious endowment is the power to awaken and hold the pure and honest love of a worthy man. When she loses it and still loves on, no one in the wide world can know the heart agony she endures. The woman who suffers from weakness and derangement of her special womanly organism soon loses the power to sway the heart of a man. Her general health suffers and she loses her good looks, her attractiveness, her amiability and her power and prestige as a woman. Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N.Y., with the assistance of his staff of able physicians, has prescribed for and cured many thousands of women. He has devised a successful remedy for woman's ailments. It is known as Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It is a positive specific for the weaknesses and disorders peculiar to women. It purifies, regulates, strengthens and heals. Medicine dealers sell it. No honest dealer will advise you to accept a substitute in order to make a little larger profit.

IT MAKES WEAK WOMEN STRONG, SICK WOMEN WELL.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets regulate and strengthen Stomach, Liver and Bowels.

SPEAKS WELL FOR O. R. F. U.

Good Showing Made by Parkdale Saturday Indicates That There is Still Some Class to the Ontario Body.

The showing made by the Parkdale Canoe Club against Varsity on Saturday should just about convince a lot of people that senior O. R. F. U. Rugby is not so slow as some of them have been thinking. During that first half the Canoeists had the Varsity team and supporters somewhat frightened. The students could gain nothing on runs or bucks, the Paddlers holding them in splendid fashion. It was not until they were forced to adopt a kicking game that the champions commenced to score, and in this respect the Parkdale backs were handicapped, because they had no opportunity to practise in the day time, and were not prepared to handle Gall's punts with any degree of accuracy. It was this fumbling on the part of the back division that allowed Varsity to score frequently in the later stages of the game. Now, they are saying that Parkdale is just as good a team as Ottawa. Where does that leave the Tigers?

LAKEFIELD TO ENTER JUNIOR CITY LEAGUE

On Friday evening of last week a meeting was held for the purpose of organizing a Junior hockey club. The meeting was well attended and considerable interest taken in the proceedings. The following officers were elected:

Hon.-President—Mr. L. J. Labelle.
President—Dr. S. J. Gibson.
1st Vice Pres.—Mr. D D. Cain.
Sec.-Treas.—Mr. W. Garbutt.
Manager—Howard Rowe.
Captain—Braden Blewett.

It was decided to enter a team in the Peterborough Junior City League, and as soon as ice can be had the team will begin getting into shape. There is splendid material in the village for a good junior team, and it is expected that the team will make themselves known this winter—Lakefield News.

HOCKEY

Outside hockey centres have been gleefully laughing up their sleeves because the impression has been going round that Lindsay will not defend the intermediate trophy won after a hard struggle last year.

But they won't laugh long!

A team from this town will be right in line when the ice freezes and if the cup goes, well, there'll be some hockey played first.

It would have been a sad tarnish on the sporting public of Lindsay if the cup was allowed to go undefended. Such a thing is almost unknown of in hockey, the team having possession of a trophy always making a hard fight to keep it, anyway.

The team suggested in this paper last night has created enthusiasm in town. Followers of the game are greatly tickled over the proposed team and with a proper management behind it there will be some good hockey furnished in Lindsay this winter.

"What's Goosie Taylor doing in goal?" was asked. The question is a natural one for Taylor has always been a forward player. But any one who has followed the game closely in Lindsay will tell you that Taylor is one of the smoothest goal tenders going, but his services have always been too valuable elsewhere, to place him there when another man was available.

Newton has dropped out of hockey for good, he says, and so Taylor will be between the nets.

Leo Cote will likely be seen along right wing this winter. The boy played good hockey for the Midgets, when the Stratford Midgets took the championship of the junior series a few years ago, and he showed rare ability against the all-star Stratford team.

Kenny Randall will spend the winter here and Frank Cote is a fixture in town. Billy Stoddard is another invaluable man. This maps out a complete forward line. Green and Beatty are two men proposed for the defence.

The men behind the team are quietly going about arranging matters and will have everything ready by the time ice arrives.—Lindsay Warder.

RUGBY

Toronto, December 6.—While the final result, in figures, of Saturday's game between the University of Toronto and Parkdale O.R.F.U. senior champions did not furnish a surprise, an analysis of the play did. Parkdale lost by 25 to 6, but they demonstrated in a most marked manner that O. R.F.U. senior football is almost as good as is played in Canada.

The remark was frequently heard that Varsity did not play their game in the first half because the score at half time was 6 to 5 in favour of the students, but the fact is forgotten that the great student team surpassed themselves in the game against Ottawa and could not be expected to play two such brilliant contests in one season. To be sure, Varsity was off colour in the initial half, but the Parkdalers were off colour in the second when twenty-one points were run up against them. Try as they would Varsity did not have a thing on the Paddlers in the first half and were only able to score at all in that period by virtue of a fumbled punt. The O.R.F.U. champions played just as good football as the Dominion champions—while they lasted—but when the break-up did come the rout was complete. At that the West Enders must be given credit for making a better showing than the Rough Riders. The lack of daylight practices made itself apparent on the Parkdale backfield, for the halves muffed badly in the pinches, and the whole team became demoralised in the second half. In the fourth quarter, especially the Varsity men, ran through the broken Parkdale fields for substantial gains. Unfortunately for the Paddlers the referee did not hear the timer's whistle when one hour of actual play had been completed. When the whistle sounded Lawson was making a fifty yard run, which resulted in a touchdown and made the score 26, instead of 21. The rule says that the additional five points must count because the ball was not dead. When 21 to 6 is compared with 31 to 7, the score in the Ottawa game, it must be admitted that the O.R.F.U. representatives made a highly creditable showing.

There was not a little worry in the Varsity camp at half time and the yell masters could not enthuse the student rooters, who were too much engrossed discussing the possibilities of defeat to do any very vigorous cheering, or singing. A majority of the 3,800 people present confidently expected that Varsity would trample over the Parkdalers to the tune of about 40 to 3, which was about the average of the guesses at the score before the game. It is no wonder that the Blue and White contingent were in a dubious frame of mind at half time because Parkdale played a dashing, heady game, and time and again broke up plays and formations which had previously been great ground-gainers for the Varsity team. One of the outstanding features was the inability of Lawson to get away for his famous race. True, he was suffering from a strained side and was not used much, but in a vast majority of the occasions when he did carry the ball he was nailed and nailed in no uncertain or futile manner by the good Parkdale tacklers. Big George Barber, the track athlete, has a world of speed, and he got Lawson repeatedly, much to the delight of the Paddlers and disinterested contingents. Lawson failed utterly to make any substantial gains until the third quarter, and with the exception of a run in that quarter and his brilliant effort in the fourth period just as the whistle sounded, Barber took good care of him and prevented him making his hurdling dashes through broken fields and around the ends. It was admitted on all hands that Barber was much more effective against the country's star half than had been Stronach a week previous.

To-morrow evening at 8 o'clock at the Y.W.C.A., Rev. E. A. Pearson will give his lecture "Rambles Through Rome." Mr. Pearson has many choice pictures which will be thrown on the canvas by Mr. H. O. Fisk. The public are cordially invited. Silver offering at the door. 1d-122

POST CARD COLUMN

This letter has been handed in with the request for its publication and is being paid for by the correspondent as is the rule with other letters of a similar kind.

To the Editor of the Examiner:

I am deeply interested in the local option campaign that is being carried on in Peterborough—my sympathies are heartily in accord with advanced temperance legislation. There is, however, one question which I would like to ask Rev. J. G. Potter, and the other leaders of the Local Option campaign in Peterborough, and I shall be very much pleased if they will answer it for me through the press. The question is, Why do the local option speakers put up at hotels which sell intoxicated liquor? I was at St. Andrew's church yesterday morning and heard Rev. Sam. Small make a powerful address against the liquor traffic. I saw him, an hour later, dining at the Oriental. This is not the first instance of this kind. I have frequently seen temperance orators who have been brought to our city in the interests of the temperance cause put up at our licensed hotels. I contend that this action is not consistent with their preaching. Why did not the Rev. Sam Small stay at the Temperance House, a few doors west of the Oriental? Why did he not patronize one of the several temperance houses in this city? These temperance houses are struggling along against the keen competition of hotels, licensed to sell spirituous liquors. The houses that are licensed to sell spirituous liquors, by reason of the profit they make over the bar, from the young men and dissipated fathers of this city, are able to give the people a much better meal than their struggling rivals, the proprietors of temperance houses. Yet these are orators, who denounce the liquor traffic patronize the licensed hotels, and assist indirectly in driving the temperance houses out of business. Any fair-minded man, will, I think, say that their action is inconsistent. Will Rev. Mr. Potter say that it is not?

"THE SMART SET" MAKES A HIT

S. H. Dudley and His Comedy Favourably Received in Montreal.

The Montreal Gazette has the following to say of "The Smart Set," which appears at the Grand on Thursday night:

"The Smart Set" proved even smarter than on previous visits to this city in their musical comedy. "His Honour the Barber," which is in three acts and seven scenes gave S. H. Dudley, as Raspberry Snow, a coloured barber, ample scope for his fun making abilities, and he did not miss his opportunities. The merits of the piece wer enhanced by a chorus above the average. They had numerous catchy songs, into which they entered with zest, and their costumes were varied and elaborate. The encores were frequent. Aline Casseles, as Merry Widow Brown, who has a capital voice; Jennie Pearl, S. H. Dudley all catching the fancy of the audience. Miss Casseles' "Consolation Lane," was perhaps the pick of the lot. As for the plot, who could carp at having to wait through the play to see President Taft shaved and the final arriving without its accomplishment. It was all a dream of Raspberry Snow, who had the hard luck to be doped by his rival, a lieutenant in the navy, outside the White House, Washington. In his dreams, however, he visited the Isle of Love in company with lovely Lily White, who had always slighted him in waking hours. When he woke up he found himself on the White House steps. The denouement took place at the race course, not, however, before S. H. Dudley had warbled, "Come after Breakfast and Bring Your Lunch," whichh proved popular.

NEW EXPLOSIVE TESTED TO-DAY

Mr. Wes. Oliver, of Gelert, Ont., in the City.

Wr. Wes. Oliver of Gelert, who has invented a new form of explosive, was in the city to-day on business, and incidentally tested the explosive qualities of the new powder under an electric spark. Mr. Frank Fairen had secured a quantity of the powder a few weeks ago and tested it this morning with a spark in the vicinity of the waterworks dam. The result was entirely satisfactory. This explosive is of a grayish colour, resembling cement. It is not discharged by concussion, and in that respect is an improvement on dynamite. It is exploded equally well by a fuse or electric spark, and Mr. Oliver expects to realise well from his invention. It is learned that the explosive will be given a trial by Bishop & Buchanan in the work at the new dam at Burleigh Falls.

Victoria County Deputation Appreciate The Hospitality

The members of the Victoria County Council who visited Peterborough yesterday and conferred with the Peterborough County Council with reference to the appointment of a new Public School Inspector, cannot speak too highly of the courteous treatment extended to them by Warden Scott and the Peterborough County Councillors. The Victoria County Councillors were driven around the town in hacks and shown every point of interest. Warden Scott accompanied them and also took them to the Normal School. This excellent building was inspected throughout.

"They have a grand building with beautiful grounds and excellent equipment," Warden Jordan said this morning.

Mr. G. A. Cornish, science master, a former Lindsay citizen, was pleased to see the Victoria County Councillors and welcomed them cordially.

"We were treated in a hospitable and cordial manner and Warden Scott and the rest of the Peterborough County Council were exceedingly courteous to us," said Warden Jordan.

Mayor Begg and Mr. J. Carew of town, were also with the deputation, and speak highly of the kindly treatment.—Lindsay Warder.

Influenza Coughs—

Influenza seems to seek out the same victims year after year, and if the disorder is once contracted, one is ever after prone to catch it again. No remedy is so sure to cure, so certain to prevent the dangerous after-effects, as "Nerviline." The germ-killing, soothing, pain-relieving power of Nerviline is the marvel of every doctor. Ten times stronger than ordinary remedies. No wonder it breaks up Coughs, Colds, and Influenza in one day.

Nerviline

"Last Winter," writes J. E. Hemmingway, of Woodstock, "I was stricken down with influenza. Every bone in my body ached. My chest was tight and sore, breathing was hard, stabbing pains shot through my lungs and made me wince. My head swam with dizziness, and fever and high pulse dragged down my strength. Nothing but Nerviline helped, and it cured me quickly. For all Winter ills I urge every family to use Polson's Nerviline."

All dealers sell Nerviline, large bottles 25 cents.

PARTY FALLEN INTO HANDS OF CANNIBALS

Special to The Examiner.

Los Angeles, Cal., Dec. 6.—A relief expedition will be sent to the island of Tiburon in the Gulf of California, where eight Arizonas and fifty Mexican soldiers are believed to have fallen into the hands of the cannibals that inhabit the island. It was on this island, which is owned by Mrs. Dunn, of this city, that Prof. Gunnell was killed several years ago while heading an exploration party. The missing party went to explore the island.

PREVENTION IS WORTH WHILE.

When you consider the risk to life, the expense, the anxiety which is involved in an attack of appendicitis and a surgical operation, it is certainly worth while to avoid it by keeping the liver and bowels regular by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. Doctors are now unanimously of the opinion that appendicitis comes from a neglect to keep the liver and bowels in a healthful condition.

$100,000 FIRE TO-DAY

Newark, N.J., Dec. 6.—Several girls are reported missing, one man is dying and three others were injured, one fatally, it is feared, as the result of a $100,000 fire in the Riley & Klotz factory at 17-19 Nulbery St. today. The flames for a time threatened St. John's Parochial School, three doors away and the sister in charge worked heroically to prevent a panic among the 500 pupils. An explosion on the third floor started the fire. The 200 employes in the building were panic stricken and many had a narrow escape. Ella Bender, a telephone girl, stuck to her post until every one else was out of the building.

Do You Realize What an Important Work the Kidneys Do?

Do you know that every drop of your blood goes to the kidneys hundreds of times every day? Do you know why?

To be filtered and purified from its impurities. That is the great work the kidneys have to do. They filter the blood. Then these impurities go to the bladder and are passed out of the body along with the urine.

Do you think it possible for you to be well, unless the kidneys do this work thoroughly?

It is these impurities—this unfiltered blood—that causes backaches, headaches, rheumatism, diabetes, Bright's disease, etc. They poison and interfere with the whole system.

If you have any kidney trouble let Doan's Kidney Pills do for you what they have done for thousands of others. They cure all forms of kidney trouble, and they cure them to stay cured.

Mrs. Maurice Doiron, Charlottetown, P.E.I., writes:—"I was troubled with my kidneys for five years. They were so bad at times that I could not cross the floor for the pain. I went to a doctor, but he did me no good at all. I sent to the druggist and got five boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills, and I am glad to say that after taking them I was cured. I have had no trouble for nearly three years now."

Price 50 cents per box or 3 for $1.25 at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co. Limited, Toronto, Ont.

THE C. N. R. TO HAVE FLEET

Mackenzie and Mann Embark Upon a New Venture, Purchasing Two Vessels.

ATLANTIC SERVICE

Montreal, Dec. 7.—Official confirmation was last evening given to the report that the Canadian Northern had concluded arrangements to start an Atlantic fleet of steamships, the story being agreed to by Mr. E. Mackay Edgar, of the London banking firm of Sperling & Co. Mr. Edgar stated that arrangements had been made to finance the nucleus of the future fleet, whose vessels will sail between Montreal, Quebec and Liverpool, in connection with the C.N.R.'s growing transcontinental system.

It is regarded as quite possible that the incursion of the Canadian Northern into the Atlantic steamship business may be responsible for the recent activity of the C.P.R. in that direction.

Two steamers have been purchased, according to President Mackenzie, the Cairo and Heliopolis, which have been engaged in the Mediterranean trade between Marseilles and Alexandria, and upon which the company has for some time had an option.

Veterans Ask Delay.

Ottawa, Dec. 7.—A deputation consisting of Lieut.-Col. Hurdman, Maj. Woodside, Maj. Winter and Andrew Miller waited upon Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Hon. Frank Oliver on behalf of the South African Veterans' Association to apply for a two-years' extension of time on which to locate land grants.

They claimed that to force the men to take action within the present year would be playing into the hands of the speculators, as most of the men would be forced to sell their rights, not having had time to make the necessary arrangements to take up a farm for themselves. It was also requested that the veterans be allowed to make applications for grants and locations at the Winnipeg land office.

Experimental Union Grows.

Guelph, Dec. 7.—The 31st annual meeting of the Ontario Experimental Union opened yesterday afternoon. J. O. Laird of Blepheim is president, and delivered his address, noting the growth of the union from a few men into the big provincial organisation with its 4,856 co-operators.

Prof. E. J. Zavitz gave an encouraging report with regard to Ontario's forestry work.

Newark, N.J., Dec. 7.—In opening for the state yesterday at the trial of Mrs. Mary J. Wilhelm, charged with murdering her husband, Frank Wilhelm, a wealthy contractor, Prosecutor Mott caused a sensation by declaring that he would prove by witnesses that "about four years ago Mrs. Wilhelm told one William Levy, who was doing plumbing work in her home, that she would give him $1,000 if he would kill her husband."

CANADA NEEDS INDUSTRIAL EDUCATION FOR THE BEST RESULTS IN DEVELOPMENT

Resolution for Technical Training is Brought into the House of Commons---Debate on the Subject Was Postponed on a Division Being Taken.

Ottawa, Dec. 7.—In the House of Commons yesterday, Hugh Guthrie (Liberal, South Wellington) moved: "That in the opinion of this House it is advisable that a commission of enquiry be forthwith appointed to investigate the needs of Canada in respect to technical education, and to report on ways and means by which these needs may be best met."

The debate on the resolution, however, was postponed as a result of speeches by Hon. Mackenzie King and Hon. Mr. Fielding, expressing the opinion that there were constitutional difficulties to be faced which would need careful consideration. Mr. Fielding assured the House that there was no intention of sidetracking the discussion.

Mr. Guthrie was prepared to agree to the adjournment in view of the Finance Minister's assurance, but the Opposition pressed a division, and the adjournment was carried by 78 to 57. Messrs. Guthrie, Fowke, and Verville voted against the Government.

Mr. Guthrie introduced the resolution, he said, at the request of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, and of the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada. The C.M.A. had taken the question up with the Boards of Trade, the heads of the higher institutions of education and the provincial Premiers. All were in favor of Government action, and the Premiers of the provinces agreed that something could be done by the Dominion without in any way trespassing upon the constitutional rights of the provinces to deal with matters of education.

Mr. Guthrie quoted from various resolutions to show that the demand was not local, or sectional, but national in its character. It had been so regarded by Germany, the United States and Switzerland, where much headway had been made.

Technical education was desired by the workman because it gave him an opportunity to improve his condition, and by the manufacturers because it would enable them to compete successfully with countries where a large portion of the population consisted of citizens who had been technically instructed.

The chief objection would no doubt be the constitutional one, that under the terms of section 93 of the B.N.A. Act, the matter of education was placed entirely under the control of the Provincial Governments. But there were many things the Federal Government might do to encourage technical education without infringing upon the rights of the provinces. The fathers of Confederation had no conception of the problem of technical education, which did not exist in their day. A technical education could be more properly described as "industrial training," and it had little to do with the system of scholastic training contemplated when the B.N.A. Act was framed.

"It is a matter," said Mr. Guthrie, "of economics rather than culture, of dollars and cents, rather than of scholarships and refinement."

Some of the subjects were now taught in our colleges, because the colleges had found it necessary to include them in the curriculum. The colleges, however, did not meet the demand from the sons of the artisan classes who desired to be technically educated.

The Federal Government would be justified in doing something for this branch of education under section 91, of the B.N.A. Act, which gave the Federal Government control of trade and commerce. At Kingston, in the Royal Military College, the Government was carrying on tuition as an adjunct of military training, why should it not therefore go into industrial training, as an adjunct of trade and commerce?

Mr. Guthrie's suggestions included an inquiry into electrical smelting and pulp wood situation and the establishment of experimental stations for machinery and grants to Provincial Governments. He suggested that the commission might visit the United States and the continent. Even if the Government did nothing in the way of establishing schools, etc., the information so gained would be of value to the provinces.

Mr. Haggart (Winnipeg) said that a trained industrial people was one of the best assets of a country, and he did not think that the people would consider this Parliament was exceeding its jurisdiction in providing for technical education.

Ralph Smith (Nanaimo) considered that the Government should take up and control the technical education of the country. Labor men ought to stand for any system or any principle that would help the masses of the people.

No country in the world was suffering from so great a disadvantage as Canada in the supply of skilled labor. The greatest percentage of accidents in the world in operating coal mines was in Canada, and British Columbia was the worst of the provinces in this respect. Men without training had been imported into these enterprises, there being a difficulty in getting skilled men.

Oliver J. Wilcox, the recently-elected member for North Middlesex, was introduced to the House yesterday by R. L. Borden and J. R. Armstrong.

Hon. Mr. Fielding intimated his intention of bringing down the budget on Thursday, but to oblige Mr. Foster, who said he could not be present on that day, the Minister of Finance said he would delay it, probably until to-day week.

NORTH MIDDLESEX BYE-ELECTION

J. W. Doyle, Conservative, Was Elected Over W. J. Mitchell.

Strathroy, Dec. 7.—J. W. Doyle Conservative, was elected as member for North Middlesex for the Provincial Legislature with a majority of 91 over W. J. Mitchell of Parkhill, Liberal.

The campaign was carried on almost completely by canvassing on both sides. Both men are well known, and Mr. Doyle was assisted by Hon. W. J. Hanna and J. S. Carstairs, the party organizer, while the Liberal candidate was assisted by Hon. A. G. MacKay, leader of the Opposition, and by F. G. Inwood, organizer.

The election was the result of the resignation of Duncan C. Ross, who entered Dominion politics and was recently elected in West Middlesex. When he was elected a year ago his majority was 109 over C. M. Hodgins, former member.

The greatest increase for the Conservatives was in Strathroy, where, although the Liberal candidate still had a majority, it was only the quarter of what it was a year ago. In Parkhill, the Liberal candidate's home, the Conservative majority was cut, but only by about 10. In McGillivray Township, where Doyle resides, the Conservative majority was nearly doubled, while there is still one sub-division to hear from. In Lucan, the Conservatives gained about 50, while in Ailsa Craig the vote remained about the same. In Adelaide the Liberal majority was nearly doubled, but the Conservatives gained about 70 in Metcalf. In East and West Williams and in Biddulph the vote from a year ago was changed but little.

Because of a severe cold Mr. Doyle was unable to appear here last night, but his brother, Michael, spoke to the crowds.

Prison Convict Of 50 Years Will Ask To Be Liberated

John P. Warren, Who Killed His Wife Before the Civil War, Hopes for Pardon—Has Been a Model Prisoner and Looks no Older Than a Man Two-thirds His Age

KNOWS LITTLE OF WORLD

Hartford, Conn., Dec. 5.—On the fourteenth of next month John P. Warren, convict No. 1 of the Connecticut State Prison at Wethersfield, will have been an inmate of that institution just fifty years and the wife slayer is already, by a big margin, the longest imprisoned life convict in the United States and possibly in the world. Peculiarly enough—and his advocates take it as a good omen—Warren stands the best chance in his confinement of securing his liberty on the fiftieth anniversary of his commitment, for on the second Tuesday in December, the fourteenth of the month, the State Board of Pardon meets, and once again the lifer, who is now seventy-one, will urge his petition before the tribunal of mercy, this time because of the personnel of the pardon board, with much greater likelihood of success than any time heretofore.

On a July forenoon in 1859, before the Civil War, before easy telegraphic and telephonic communication, before the days of the quick and frequent railroad travel, to say nothing of before the epoch of automobiles, John P. Warren, invited his eighteen-year-old wife to take a walk with him and coming to a brook near their farm in Willington, a small town in Tolland County, in northeastern Connecticut, he suggested that they take off their boots and stockings and bathe their feet in the cool waters of the brook. She acquiesced, but once near the brook Warren seized her and held her head under the foot or more of water until she was dead. Why Warren committed the crime no one knows and Warren himself has never talked of it.

Every time Warren has applied for a pardon he has been met with spirited opposition from his former neighbours and their children for the deed has become something of a household yarn.

Warren hid the body in the woods, where it was soon found.

While confined in Tolland County jail Warren got a butcher knife and attached Griggs, jailer. Warren escaped, but was caught in Eastford, near Willimantic, before he had walked fifty miles.

Warren's plea of guilty and his attorney's earnest plea for a second degree sentence saved his life, and he was sentenced to prison for life the day on which a notable meeting was held in Hartford of famous Connecticut patriots, under a call "to save the Union."

Warren was taken to Wethersfield, and what has happened in the many and long years since he knows of only indirectly and from what he is permited to read and what he observes from the prison grounds. In prison he must not speak, and only sees visitors occasionally.

At present the old lifer, who has a wonderful constitution and a still more wonderful mentality, mingles with the other six hundred male prisoners.

Of the eight or nine hours which he spends outside his cell, seven and a half hours Warren is his own boss, and on his own responsibility. He antedates Deputy Baisden, the oldest officer at the instituiton by fifteen years, but Baisden and the other thirty day guards and the seven night officers all speak highly of Warren. Never since his commitment has he been fractious or had to be disciplined, and only those guards, who from day to day see many a strong physique break under the rigorous confinement and the monotonous routine and take note of fine, brilliant and clever mentalities being sapped of their vitality to land in the insane wards, can appreciate what a marvellous being Warren really is. Though seventy-one, he looks more like forty-five or perhaps fifty. For the past two years he has grown somewhat gray around the temples and he stoops a little, but he marches along with his cellmates to and from the dining benches as smartly and easily as any of the younger convicts, who race upstairs to their cell tiers for after-dinner exercise.

Unlike most prisoners Warren has never discussed his crime or the possibilities of release with his keepers, but this week Warden Garvin gave an inkling of how he personally felt when in talking over Warren's petition to the pardon board, he significantly remarked, "There's nothing like a little judicious pardoning as an anchor for these poor life men, who have no other star of hope and many a cloud of black despair."

The Governor of the State is, ex-officio, a member of the Board of Pardons, and Supreme Court Chief Justice Simeon Baldwin of New Haven, is another member At the 1909 session of the Legislature of this State a bill was introduced which would permit a majority vote of the Board of Pardons to govern its verdicts, the understanding being that it was for Warren's especial benefit, for it was well known that time and again one member, a certain noted Hartford jurist, who is now not a member, had held out and prevented the necessary unanimous opinion which would have paroled if not released.

It will be stated next month as it has been at previous hearings that Warren's two younger brothers, of Willamontic, and his nephews and cousins, all people of excellent standing, will take care of Warren, who indeed is well able to take care of himself in a material way for some years to come. What is desired is that he released in time for him to avoid the stigma and shame of dying within the prison walls.

UNFIT FOR THE KINGDOM

PASTOR RUSSELL PREACHES ON WANT OF STEADFASTNESS.

Text, "No Man Having Put His Hand to the Plow and Looking Back Is Fit For the Kingdom of God" (Luke ix 62)—As Sinners We Were Unfit For Any Favor Much Less Joint-Heirship With His Son.

Sunday, Dec. 5.—Pastor Russell had a large attendance to-day at the Brooklyn Tabernacle. He took for his text the words of the Saviour, "No man having put his hand to the plow, and looking back, is fit for the Kingdom of God" (Luke ix, 62). The discourse follows:

The Great Teacher did not use the methods of modern revivalists to secure a following. He did not ask the multitudes to raise their hand if they would prefer to go to heaven at death and then publish them as converts—Christians. Indeed his methods were the very reverse of this, avoiding all kinds of sensational appeals to pride, selfishness, vanity, etc. He set forth in plain terms the difficulties to be expected by all those who espouse his Cause and become his disciples. He forewarned them that it would mean the taking up of a cross and the bearing of it in his footsteps in the narrow way of self sacrifice. He warned these, saying, "Marvel not, if the world hate you. Ye know that it hated me before it hated you. If ye were of the world, the world would love his own; but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you" (I. John iii, 13; John xv, 18, 19).

Instead of trying to produce an excitement which would over-balance the judgment of his hearers and lead them to profess what they subsequently would not be able or willing to practice, the Great Teacher, on the contrary, said to those contemplating discipleship, "Sit down first and count the cost." Instead of attempting to sway the multitudes, our Lord took a different course and attempted to make disciples of only a special class—not the poor, not the rich, not the learned, not the ignorant, but, irrespective of these class lines and distinctions, his call was to all those who loved righteousness and hated iniquity. All those who were weary and heavy-laden, oppressed by sin and its penalty to themselves and their friends—these he called to learn of him and find rest of soul.

Thenceforth that class, having been brought in touch with the Redeemer, can make further progress only through faith in him and submission to his guidance into all Truth and into fellowship with the Father. The class thus influenced we believe to be small as compared to humanity as a whole — only that portion which in honesty of heart deplores sin and longs for righteousness and fellowship with God. These, like the remainder of the race, are by nature fallen, imperfect, sinful, condemned, but in these still persists some trace of the image of God, in the perfection of which father Adam was created. It is this trace or strain of the Divine character represented by conscience and faith which leads them to recognize their fallen and sinful condition, as compared with the Divine standard of perfection, and this becomes the basis of their calling or drawing of God, their "ear." "He that hath an ear, let him hear" (Revelation ii, 7). It will be observed that we are not specially blaming or condemning those who have not the hearing ear. On the contrary we remember the gracious words of Scripture, that in God's due time, "All the blind eyes shall be opened; all the deaf ears shall be unstopped" (Isaiah xxxv, 5). We are glad of this promise of God that ultimately all shall see and all shall hear and all shall know Him, from the least to the greatest. We rejoice, too, that when they know Him truly, they will rejoice, even as do we now. That will be their time of responsibility, their time of trial or judgment for life or death eternal on the earthly plane.

Our text speaks of the Kingdom of God. And it is important that we first of all notice that these words have in the Scriptures a two-fold significance. For instance, our Lord Jesus taught that we should pray to the Father, "Thy Kingdom come; thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven." The reference of this prayer is to the Millennial reign or government of Christ, which St. Paul declares will begin at the Second Coming of our Lord, and continue until he shall have put down all insubordination, all sin, everything contrary to divine character and Law. It will be the Kingdom of God which will subdue all things. It will be the Kingdom of God amongst men perfected when all things shall have been subdued. And when Christ's mediatorial Kingdom shall be, at the end of the Millennium, delivered back to God, even the Father, God's Kingdom will have fully come to the earth. God's will then will be possible of accomplishment by men, because all will have reached perfection; and Christ's mediatorial Kingdom will end because it will be no longer necessary. It will have accomplished the great purpose for which is was intended.

It was not, however, respecting that Millennial reign, that mediatorial Kingdom, that our Lord spoke in our text, nor did he refer to the perfect Kingdom, as it will be turned over to the Father at the end of the Millennium and will last forever. Our Lord used the words, "Not fit for the Kingdom of God," as he did in many others of his discourses—in respect to the Church class now called of the Father to be the "Kingdom," in the sense of being the kings and priests of that Kingdom—the royalty of that Kingdom—the reigning family—the Queen, the Lamb's Wife, associated with the Heavenly Bridegroom, King of kings and Lord of lords, in his rule of a thousand years.

We now have before our minds the two ways in which the expression, Kingdom of God, is used and we can readily see that our Lord could not refer to the Millennial Kingdom and say that any would be too degraded to be fit for the influences of his Millennial Kingdom, because that Kingdom is designed for the very purpose of dealing with the unfit and gradually, during the thousand years of its reign of righteousness uplifting men out of sin and death conditions, if they will, to the full human perfection which Adam lost, which Jesus redeemed, and which is to be restored to the willing and obedient, as St. Peter declares (Acts iii, 19-21). It follows, then, that our Lord must have referred to those called of the Father and accepted by himself to be chiseled and polished—to be taught in the School of Christ and eventually to become his Bride and joint-heir in the Millennial Kingdom. No man will be esteemed fit for a share in that Millennial Kingdom, unless he attains to the glorious qualities of character, saintship, which the Scriptures set forth as the Divine standard—"Copies of God's dear Son" (Romans viii, 29).

"Fit for the Kingdom!" Let us think for a moment what these words signify. First of all we recognize that, as sinners, we were most thoroughly unfit for any favor of God, much less this greatest of all favors, joint-heirship with his Son and "partakers of the Divine nature" (II. Peter i, 4). But that difficulty has all been overcome with those who have come unto God through Christ and been made partakers of his holy Spirit of adoption. Of such we read, "It is God that justifieth! Who is he that condemneth" (Romans viii, 33-34). It is Christ that died for our sins and who now is our Advocate. Who could in any wise come between us and our Saviour and our Heavenly Father?

But this justification is not enough. If we were perfect actually instead of merely reckonedly we would not be fit for the Kingdom of God—we would not be fit to govern others—to be "kings and priests unto God and to reign on the earth" (Revelation xx, 6). We should still be unfit to be the judges of the world, as the Scriptures declare that we shall be, saying, "Know ye not that the saints shall judge the world" (I. Corinthians vi, 2). Our Heavenly Father in bringing many sons unto glory made the Captain of their salvation (Jesus) perfect through sufferings. Should we think it strange that we, his younger brethren, justified through his blood, should be required, not merely to make a profession of Godliness, holiness, but also to approve or attest that sentiment to be a part of our very character! Is not what we as the Church of Christ experience very reasonable indeed—who would be prepared to teach the world meekness, patience, brotherly-kindness, long-suffering, love, without first of all developing these various qualities of character in himself? And how could he develop these and be tested except under just such schooling and discipling influences as now are upon the Church of Christ, with a view to making us fit for the glorious position of our high calling of God in Christ Jesus?

When the Scriptures refer to the Church as being fit for the Kingdom and as being the "overcomers" for whom the Kingdom is prepared, and who shall share its glories and honors, because "they are worthy" (Revelation iii, 4), we are to understand this worthiness and fitness, not that they were originally so, but that by God's grace, through Christ, a transformation work will eventually bring some to this glorious position where God himself will esteem them worthy to be called his children, and to be joint-heirs with his Son, the Great King.

There is one certain standard of fitness for the Kingdom and none other will do; but there may be quite a variety of conditions which make one unfit for the Kingdom. One of these is murder. "No murderer hath eternal life abiding in him" (I. John iii, 15). He would be unfit for the Kingdom. This would not signify, however, that one who had once been a murderer might not, by a sound conversion and by faithfulness in the School of Christ, become a member of the Kingdom class. But the word murder here used has a broader meaning than is generally attached to it—the meaning which St. John gave to the word when he said that whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer (I. John ii, 11). We know, then, that no brother-hater is fit for the Kingdom. But, some may have been brother-haters and have been washed, cleansed, sanctified, brought into heart-relationship with the Lord and into love of the brethren. If so, the implication is that they have lost the spirit of murder from their hearts and are brother-haters no longer. The Scriptures tell us also that it will be possible for a man who has been figuratively washed from his former condition of sin-defilement and who has been clothed of the Lord symbolically in a robe of righteousness and who had been begotten of the holy Spirit of love to turn from this holy commandment of love—to turn from the way of righteousness, to his former condition of sin-defilement. The Apostle gives the illustration of the sow that was washed returning to her wallowing in the mire (II. Peter ii, 23). But the case of such is hopeless if the step be taken with full intention and deliberation—if the return to a murderous condition of heart—brother-hating—be with the full consent of the heart. The Apostle, however, does intimate that up to a certain point there is hope of recovery and hence he urges all of the faithful to assist these, saying "He that converteth a sinner (once a brother) from the error of his ways shall save a soul from death."

Again we read, "No drunkard shall enter into the Kingdom of God" (I. Corinthians vi, 10). He surely would be unfit. This does not, however, imply that all total abstainers from intoxicant liquors are fit for the Kingdom. Neither does it imply that a drunkard might not reform and thus cease to be a drunkard, and by the Lord's grace, become fit for the Kingdom. Moreover the word drunkard in the Bible is frequently used in a figurative sense. It represents an addled condition of the mind; as for instance, we read, that Babylon's cup made all the nations drunk (Revelation xviii, 2-3). This signifies that fellowship with false doctrines has permeated, influenced, bewildered the world in general. God's people partaking of Christ's cup of suffering are said to receive "the spirit of a sound mind"—clearness of understanding respecting the Divine character and Plan and the principles of righteousness. All who will be fit for the Kingdom may be expected to have considerable clearness of understanding respecting Divine things. They are to know God, and by receiving his Spirit, they are to have understanding of "the deep things of God," which the natural man cannot understand (I.Corinthians ii, 10-14). Of this our Lord spoke, saying, "This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."

Pride is another quality of the heart which would render its possessor unfit for the Kingdom of God. We read that the Lord "resisteth the proud and giveth grace to the humble" (I. Peter v, 5). Pride is one of the things which God hates. It is a foe to righteousness in general and leads captive many into sin. When we read that God shows his favor to the humble, we may be sure that the favor of joint-heirship with the Redeemer is for the humble alone. With what carefulness this should lead us to search our hearts and put away everything in the nature of pride, self-conceit. Love is the fulfilling of the Law. Love is the Law of the New Creation; and pride is a foe to love. It is related to selfishness, which is a deep-seated foe of every grace of the holy Spirit.

The Lord wishes us to see that the Heavenly Father is not merely calling for those who have generally good intentions and who would rather do right than do wrong. We may rejoice with such that they are better than their neighbors, but they are not fit for the Kingdom of God, unless their love for righteousness, for Truth, for the will of God, be so firmly established that they are ready and willing to "endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ" and to "fight a good fight" to the end of the course, laying hold upon eternal life and glory and immortality. One of God's objects in permitting the world and the flesh and the Adversary to have the power which they now possess to counteract and to fight against our good intentions and good resolutions is explained in the Scriptures. We read "The Lord your God proveth you, to know whether ye love the Lord your God with all your heart and with all your soul" (Deuteronomy xiii, 3). If love of sin or love of self or love of any earthly thing can overbalance our love to the Lord and to his Truth and his people, we are not worthy of a place in the Kingdom—not fit for the Kingdom. Not merely good professions, but faithfulness unto death, fixity of character, are required of the Lord of such as he would honor with a share in the Kingdom.

Having noticed that lack of love, lack of zeal, lack of constancy, lack of devotion would unfit for the Kingdom, let us notice some of the characteristics necessary to a place in the Kingdom—some of the qualities, therefore, which we must each cultivate in our own hearts, which we must each develop in his own character. The Apostle explains these and urges the matter thus, "Add to your faith fortitude; and to fortitude knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness love. For if these things be in you and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor untruitful in the knowledge of your Lord Jesus Christ. . . . for if ye do these things, ye shall never fail: for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting Kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ" (II. Peter i, 5-11).

Why Horseshoes Are Lucky.

Why is an old horseshoe supposed to bring luck to the owner if hung in the hall or behind the door? Horseshoes were at one time nailed up as a protection against witches. There is a legend that the devil one day asked St. Dunstan, who was noted for his skill in shoeing horses, to shoe his "single hoof." Knowing who his customer was, Dunstan tied him tightly to the wall and proceeded with his job, but purposely put the devil into so much pain that he roared for mercy. And it was not until he had promised that he would never again enter a place where he saw a horseshoe displayed that Dunstan would release his captive.

Keeping Your Temper.

There is an anecdote of Benjamin Disraeli, the great statesman, which aptly bears on the question of keeping one's temper. He was staying in Hampshire with a friend who owned a number of fine horses. One of these was noted for its terrible temper.

"I don't know why I keep that animal," Disraeli's host said one day, "it is the worst-tempered horse I have ever known!"

Without a moment's hesitation Disraeli offered, much to his host's astonishment, to buy the horse.

"Any temper can be curbed," he said; "and the worst can often be trained into the best. The spirited colt makes the finest horse!"

AIR CARRIES HEALING MEDICINE

That Cures Colds, Catarrh and Diseases of the Throat, Lungs and Bronchial Tubes.

About the healing power of the air of the pine woods everybody knows, but to supply it in the form of medicine seemed almost beyond realization. After many years of careful study a scientific remedy, now known as Catarrhozone, has been produced, which enables the sufferer to breathe into his lungs all the healing properties of the balsamic pine woods air. This marvellous remedy has conquered catarrh. It unquestionably does cure it permanently.

CURE IS GUARANTEED.

You cannot fail to be cured by Catarrhozone, because it reaches and destroys the cause of the disease. You simply inhale the antiseptic vapor. It instantly spreads to every part of the breathing organs. The micro-organisms infecting the diseased tissues of your nose, throat, and lungs die instantly. There is nothing left to cause inflammation. Any spots that are raw and sore are quickly healed by Catarrhozone, and you soon are completely cured.

IT RELIEVES INSTANTLY!

It is impossible to breathe through a Catarrhozone inhaler without at once feeling better. Your head is cured of mucous discharge, your nostrils are cleansed of all putrid matter, the phlegm is removed from your throat. Every trace of catarrh is searched out of the system by Catarrhozone, which thoroughly disinfects and purifies every organ of the body.

Catarrhozone is the only natural remedy for catarrh. It cures by cleansing and purifying all diseased tissues, not by deadening the stomach with drugs.

MINISTERS AND DOCTORS USE "CATARRHOZONE."

It is a clean, simple, and satisfactory remedy that is endorsed by the clergy, and universally prescribed by the medical profession because it is scientific and absolutely certain to effect lasting cures.

Don't be misled into accepting a substitute for Catarrhozone, which alone can cure thoroughly. It is so powerfully healing that colds disappear in an hour, coughs in two hours, and even bronchitis, asthma, and chronic catarrh in a comparatively short time. Two months' treatment, $1.00. Small size, 50c.: all dealers, or by mail from the Catarrhozone Company, Kingston, Ontario.

UNITED STATES MONEY

There Are Ten Kinds on Uncle Sam's Official List.

ALL ARE NOT LEGAL TENDER.

Some of the Most Imposing of the Paper Currency May Be Lawfully Refused When Offered in Payment of an Obligation of Any Kind.

Officially there are just ten kinds of money in circulation in the United States. Could you name them all offhand? Do you know which of those besides gold coin are legal tender and in what amount? It may be that "all money looks alike to you," but there's a difference, and below is the list:

Gold coins, standard silver dollars, subsidiary silver, gold certificates, silver certificates, treasury notes (1890), United States notes (greenbacks), national bank notes, nickel coins and bronze coins.

Looking upon this formidable classification of United States money as made by the treasury department, it becomes more formidable when it is considered from the highly technical point of view as a legal tender. Some of the most imposing of the paper currency is not a legal tender at all, while, as to the minor coins, they are legal tender in such small amounts as to startle the average layman. It may be well to recall to this layman that the term "legal tender" owes its significance to the fact that in payment of debt or obligation of any kind it can be forced upon the creditor "in full of all demands."

Gold certificates, silver certificates and national bank notes, of which such enormous numbers circulate everywhere, are not legal tender. If you have plenty of money and if you have forced Jones to sue you in order to get judgment, Jones can turn down every one of these bills tendered in payment and force you to dig up something better.

Should Jones do such a thing you might conceive the idea of fixing him by unloading a whole lot of silver coins upon him. But you want to know what you're doing there, too, for he'll take only $10 worth of halves, quarters and dimes, while of nickels and copper cents only 25 cents value is legal tender.

But as to the standard silver dollar, there's no limit upon your shoveling them out to Jones. This old "dollar of our dads" still is the real thing in all business transactions unless some clause in a contract has provided otherwise. Jones may refuse the silver certificate, but when you dig up the metal dollar they go unquestioned at their face value. And 1,000 of them weigh 58.92 pounds.

Treasury notes of the act of 1890 are legal tender to their face value in payment of all debts, public and private, unless expressly stipulated in the contract.

Strictly speaking, the United States notes or greenbacks are legal tender, with the exception of duties on imports and interest on the public debt. Practically, however, since the resumption of specie payment in 1879, greenbacks have been received freely and without question by the government, though the law respecting them hasn't been changed.

While the gold and silver certificates are not legal tender as between individuals, both issues are receivable for all government dues of whatever kind, in this respect legally more acceptable than is the greenback.

National bank notes, while not legal tender and not receivable for duties on imports, still may be paid by the government for salaries and all debts of the government except interest dues and in redemption of national currency.

By especial enactment no foreign coin of any kind or denomination shall be a legal tender in the United States, so that if some time the street car conductor does balk at the chance Canadian dime fished from your pocket keep cool and dig for something that is United States. It's your move.

ANNOUNCEMENT CARDS.

Must Be Sent to Acquaintances, "At Home" Cards Only to Friends.

Girls who are married quietly should be particular to send many announcement cards. To say that these engraved forms should be sent broadcast is none too strong, for to omit a person is equivalent to saying that one does not care to acknowledge his or her existence, and they differ from invitations in that to send one is not tantamount to a request to continue the acquaintance. But if there is the slightest doubt as to whether or not a person is to be remembered by an announcement it would be better to err on the side of commission than omission.

The inclosure of an "at home" card becomes a direct request for the person's acquaintance, and in my opinion such cards are important with announcements. There is always more or less speculation as to the reasons or details of a small wedding when the persons married have a large list of acquaintances, and unless there are "at home" cards the newly married couple are not definitely located in the minds of their friends. Nothing definite is expected of the prospective hostess, because no definite days need be set. It is enough that the card shall read, "At home after November first," for instance. The address then follows.

There are slight changes in the forms for announcements. Those who care for the most elaborate choose a kind wherein the recipient's name is written, as in some wedding invitations. This means much extra work and is not better form than the usual one that omits it.

Also as in invitations the announcements may be made in the name of the bride's parents or her nearest relative—for example:

"Mr. and Mrs. James Brown Smith" may "announce the marriage of their daughter Laura to Mr. Charles Evans Jones," the place and date following.

They are sent out precisely as are invitations. There are two envelopes, and the name of a young girl may be put on that of the parents. The cards must be addressed and stamped to be posted immediately after the ceremony. It is a great mistake to have any delay in getting them out.

Incidentally one may say to a business girl that it is a courteous act to send an announcement, but not an "at home" to her former employer, and whether or not she has ever seen the wife, if he is married, her name should be included. It is never good form to send a married man a card of any sort without also one to his wife.

DOMESTIC PROBLEMS SOLVED

Remember that the secret of comfortable housecleaning is system linked with knowledge.

Fly specks and dirt on mirror surfaces may be rubbed off with a cream made of whiting and alcohol.

Remember that in every kind of cleaning or polishing it is essential to dust every crevice before beginning.

If the floors of a closet are wiped off with gasoline or benzine after being scrubbed it helps to keep off insects.

Have on hand plenty of boiling water, washing soda and a good disinfectant to wash all toilet utensils and to pour down drains.

A good cleanser for hard wood is to wash it with a clean flannel wet in turpentine and rub lightly afterward with boiled linseed oil.

Most modern brassware is lacquered and needs only to be wiped off with a damp cloth. Work quickly and do not let the surfaces get wet.

Paint the inside woodwork of bedsteads with corrosive sublimate and turpentine, 5 cents' worth of the former to a pint of the latter.

Brica-brac should be carefully dusted before being washed in hot borax water or soapsuds in which a little ammonia has been dissolved.

To clean gilt try touching it up a little at a time with a camel's hair brush dipped in alcohol. Do not let it dry, but rub off with flannel, which should be changed frequently.

Unlacquered brass, if not rubbed up with one of the good patented brass polishes, can be washed in warm soapsuds, then rubbed with salt and vinegar put on with a piece of flannel. Lastly, polish with dry whiting.

AN AIRSHIP MENU.

Very Smart For a Bon Voyage Luncheon.

Clam Bouillon.
Celery. Bread Rolls.
Salted Pistachio Nuts.
Oyster Patties.

Whether airships will ever become popular vehicles of transit is a much debated question, but there is not a shadow of doubt that everybody just now is interested in their trial flights. Along with other heroes of the day the Wright brothers have had a smart hat named in their honor, and the dressmakers are designing costumes for aerial fliers of the fair sex that are models of comfort and chicness. And now the up to date housewife has taken up the aeroplane idea and is using menus decorated with an airship when giving a bon voyage luncheon. The illustration shows how the scheme is carried out, and a girl clever with her brush will have no trouble in making her own menu cards.

About Mrs. Hudson and Mrs. Fulton.

If Henry Hudson and Robert Fulton gallantly referred to their wives as their "better halves" time has been less polite in almost consigning their memory to oblivion.

Of Mrs. Hudson we have scarcely any record. There is no record of who she was or where she died. She was simply the wife of Henry Hudson, the woman who watched him sail away on his hazardous voyages toward an unknown world and who in his absence struggled with poverty and prayed for his return.

In an old contract of Hudson's with the East India company we find that the company bound itself to pay Hudson $320 if he was successful in finding the passage which he was sailing for; "also other rewards commensurate for his service to be agreed upon between the company and the said Henry Hudson." But, mindful of the wife and children he was leaving behind him, Hudson had the proviso inserted that if he failed to return from his voyage the company was to pay his widow for her support and the maintenance of his children the munificent sum of $80!

Whether Mrs. Hudson collected this money after the ill fated expedition, in which she lost both her husband and her eldest son, we do not know, but we find in the court minutes of the East India company for April 14, 1614, the following: "Being informed that Mrs. Hudson, the wife or widow of Mr. Hudson, who was lost in the northwest discovery, desired their favor for employing a son of his, she being left very poor, and conceiving that they were partly obliged in charity to give assistance in regard that his father perished in the commonwealth, resolved to recommend him to the care of some one who is going to make a voyage to the East Indies."

In an entry a few days later we find that the company was even better than its word, for we read, "Mrs. Hudson's son being recommended to the care of Hunt, master's mate in the Samaritan, 5 £ be laid out for him in apparel and necessaries."

More is of course known of Mrs. Fulton, since she has living descendants not many generations removed from her memory. However, Fulton's biographers content themselves with dismissing the lady in one paragraph and with the statement: "In 1806 Fulton was married to Harriet, the daughter of Walter Livingstone, some relative of the enterprising chancellor, with whom Fulton had so much controversy. Four children were born of the union—three girls and a boy, Robert Barlow Fulton."

Perhaps it is because Fulton was considered a confirmed bachelor when he married, being more than forty years old and having apparently paid little attention to women previously, that the lady in question did not have greater influence on his career.

Entertaining the Invalid.

To entertain an invalid make a scrap fan as follows: Get a smooth pasteboard fan and cover the pictures or advertising by pasting over the fan smooth white paper. On one side then paste as many clippings of funny anecdotes, stories or poems as you have room for. On the other side paste clippings of poetry that the invalid may like to read often or possibly commit to memory. Try to select some of her special favorites. This can be used to while away many an hour when the invalid is too weak to hold a book or magazine without becoming tired.

The Cookbook.

When frying mush dip the slices first in the white of an egg. This makes it crisp.

The white mayonnaise prepared by foreign chefs calls for cream, lemon juice and the white of an egg instead of the oil, vinegar and egg yolks used in the ordinary mayonnaise.

When baking apple pie put a teaspoonful or two of strong cold tea in the filling; also try the same in your apple sauce or baked apples and notice the improved flavor of the apples.

The objectionable sputtering and flying of the hot fat when eggs, hominy, apples and like things are dropped into it to fry may be prevented if a little flour is sifted into the fat just before they are added.

Church and Clergy.

The insurance upon St. Paul's cathedral, London, is about £95,000, or in the neighborhood of half a million dollars.

The Collegiate Dutch Reformed church of New York city has increased the salary of Rev. Dr. David B. Burrell, its senior pastor, to $15,000, with the promise of a pension on retiring.

Rev. Bertrand Martin Tipple, formerly pastor of Embury Memorial Methodist Episcopal church, Hartford, Conn., and for some years pastor of the Methodist church at Stamford, Conn., has been chosen to take charge of the work of the Methodist church in Rome, Italy.

Short Stories.

Bullets were formerly made of stone.

One town in Spain has one hunchback to every thirteen inhabitants.

Eleven years ago about 200 automobiles were made and used in the United States. Next year, builders predict, the number will be 200,000.

Electric engines will haul the ships through the Panama canal when the big ditch is completed. This will prevent serious accidents and collisions. The electric engines will run on special tracks on the bank.

He was ignorant of the name of the makers of the compass, although he had been master of the Athabaska for three years. He does not seem to have taken the most common precaution to avoid danger. His log was written in pencil and the spelling was execrable. It was both farcical and valueless."

Butchers.

Best picked butchers sold at from $5.25 to $5.50; good, $5 to $5.25; medium, [illegible] to $5; common, $4.75 to $4.90; cows, [illegible] to $4.50.

Hogs.

There were about as many different prices quoted as there were hogs on the market. We heard of $7.65, $7.50 and $7.40, yet, and $7.65, being paid farmers at different points in Ontario, but we would judge $7.50 to $7.60 f.o.b. cars at country points, and $7.75 to $7.90 fed and watered, will not be far wrong.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, Dec. 6.—(Special.)—At the Montreal Stock Yards, West End Market, receipts for last week were 3106 cattle, 1500 sheep and lambs, 2000 hogs and 350 calves. Offerings this morning consisted of 1000 cattle, 700 sheep and lambs, 1000 hogs and 200 calves. Cattle prices since this day week show a decline of ½c per pound, due to increased offerings and unseasonably mild weather. Fifteen carloads of northwest ranch steers, cows and heifers of fine quality met with a ready sale. Top quality steers sold at 5½c; good at 4¾c to 5c; fair at 4½c to 4¾c; medium at 3¾c to 4c, and common at 3c to 3½c per pound. Supplies of canning stock were very large and demand good from packers, with prices 1¼c to 1½c for cows, and at 2¼c to 2½c per pound for bulls. Prices for sheep advanced ½c to 1c, and for lambs ½c to 1c per pound, attributed to smaller supplies and continued good demand from butchers. Sheep sold at 4¼c to 4½c, and lambs at 6c to 6½c per pound. Calves were scarce, with good demand, at from $3 to $13 each. Hog prices showed an advance since last Wednesday of 15c to 25c per cwt, due to increased scarcity of stock, and, as packers wanted more than usual, sales of selected lots from west of Toronto were made at $8.75, and from east of Toronto at $8.90, weighed off cars.

At the Canadian Pacific live stock market receipts of live stock for last week were 2730 cattle for export account and 1973 cattle, 2000 sheep and lambs, 1422 hogs and 220 calves for local consumption. The supply this morning for sale consisted of 750 cattle, 600 sheep and lambs, 675 hogs and 200 calves. Prices for cows and bulls advanced 15c to 25c per 100 lbs.

THE APPOINTMENT OF A PERMANENT ASSESSOR WAS DISCUSSED BY COUNCIL

Mr. Thos. B. McGrath's Request That the Appointment be Made Permanent Was Cause of Long Discussion.

IN HANDS OF COMMITTEE

The application of Mr. Thos. B. McGrath to the Council to have his appointment as Assessor for the city made permanent, furnished the Aldermen with food for a somewhat lengthy discussion at last night's regular meeting of the city fathers. Mr. McGrath, in his application pointed out that he had served the city in that capacity for twenty years, and considered that it would be better to have the position made permanent, so that he would not have to apply to the new council every year.

Ald. McIntyre endorsed the application. He knew that Mr. McGrath had been assessing for nineteen or twenty years, and had always supported him for the position. He thought that he should get the permanent appointment asked for, and accordingly made the following motion: "That Thos. McGrath be appointed assessor for the City of Peterborough, at a yearly salary and that a by-law be prepared at the next meeting of the Council."

Ald. Duffus seconded the motion in doing so, stating that Mr. McGrath had always filled the position most satisfactorily, and needed a recommendation from no one.

Ald. Morgan, who stated that he had been the only one to vote against Mr. McGrath's appointment last year, also spoke in favour of the suggestion that his appointment should be made a permanent one.

Ald. Hicks stated that he was agreeable to the appointment being made, but there were several things to be taken into consideration. It might be considered necessary to have two assessors, or perhaps one head of that department, with an assistant.

Ald. Morrow said there were many details, such as the question of salaries, etc., which would have to be dealt with before the Council could take action.

Ald. Gillespie thought the matter should be taken up by some committee when these questions could be settled.

"I can't see any advantage of sending it to a comittee," remarked Ald. McIntyre.

Ald. Duncan took the same view of the matter.

"What salaries were paid last year?" asked Ald. Phelan.

"$600 and $500" was the reply.

Ald. Gillespie moved that the matter be taken up by a committee appointed by the Mayor, and his Worship appointed the following to act: Ald. McIntyre, Gillespie, Hicks, Duffus and Morgan.

Ald. Bradburn expressed himself as being opposed to any permanent appointment at this time of the year. It would better be left to the incoming council to deal with.

"I am prepared to go ahead and settle the thing to-night," declared Ald. Phelan.

Ald. Metheral was of the opinion that the assessor should be a permanent officer and considered that in such a case he would be able to do much better service, but he did not feel that he was justified in tying anybody's hands at the end of the year.

"We're here now and we know the man," said Ald. Duffus. I can't see that we will be in a better position to settle the matter than right now."

However, Ald. Gillespie's motion to leave the matter in the hands of a committee to arrange the details and report back to the Council, was carried.

FORBIDDEN TO KISS

Girls Had Practised, Too, and Were Lip Perfect.

Chicago, Dec. 7.—The question "To Kiss or Not to Kiss" in the Temple Emmanuel debt raising soiree has been decided in the negative. The young women of the synagogue had established a "kissatorium" in the bazaar in North Side Turner Hall and proposed to kiss away $5,000 debt on the church.

"But it's all off now," sighed Lulu Mayer of No. 3993 Clarendon avenue to-night. "Some of the old prudes thought it wouldn't be nice for us to sell kisses, though we had already consented to do so.

"The girls have been rehearsing among themselves, and we expected to be lip perfect in our parts, but now it is all off. Oh, dear."

This action was decided upon, it is said, because of the objections raised by older members of the congregation, criticisms of the rabbis of other congregations and the unpleasant notoriety caused by the announcement of this feature.

MAKE THE BLOOD RICH AND RED

Miss Cynthia Hutchinson, Hanesville, B C., writes: "My system was so completely run down that my friends as well as myself thought I could never get better. All medicines failed to help me. A trial of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food benefitted me and at the end of a month people scarcely knew me I had improved so much. The blood was enriched, colour improved, new flesh was added, and I got strong and well."

TWO NEW FEATURES FOR THE EXAMINER

The Examiner will commence two new daily features in a few days that should prove very popular with the readers of this paper. Arrangements have been made for the publishing each day of a prose verse from the pen of Walt. Mason, the poet philosopher, whose clever verses have recently become a feature of many big newspapers throughout the country. His verse deals with current topics and events with a humour and a keen insight into human nature that makes them eagerly looked forward to.

In addition to this feature the Examiner has arranged for a daily column of chit-chat by Ruth Cameron, which will be read with interest by the women of Peterborough. Miss Cameron is recognised as one of the brightest and most successful women writers of the day, and her column always scintillates with cheerfulness and good humour that cannot fail to be pleasing to women readers and that the men will probably find entertaining as well.

The two new departments will be inaugurated shortly.

FAMILY DISAGREEMENT BECAUSE HUSBAND REMAINED OUT LATE

Cavan Husband Alleged to Have Struck Wife With Broom During Altercation, Resulting From His Staying Out and Leaving Her and Baby Alone.

Albert Johnson, of the Township of Cavan, appeared in the Police Court Friday, charged by his wife with non-support. Before taking up the case the magistrate suggested that the husband and wife have a conference with a view of settling their differences. They were left alone in the court room for half an hour, after which they announced that no progress had been made towards a settlement of their grievances.

Mr. H. A. Ward appeared for the plaintiff and Mr. G. N. Gordon, of Peterborough, for the defendant.

Sixteen witnesses were in attendance, and it looked like a midnight session for the Court. The evidence of the plaintiff was sufficient, however, to decide the matter. It was simply a case of city girl marrying a farmer, and then becoming lonesome on the farm. She complained to the Court about her husband staying out late at night, leaving her at home with the baby. When asked by Mr. Gordon what she considered was a late hour for a husband to remain out she replied 8 o'clock. On the occasion which caused the trouble her husband did not return home until 7.30 or 8 o'clock, and in an altercation which followed, the husband struck her with the broom. Two days later she left her happy home and has since been visiting.

The magistrate decided that the bride of two years had no sufficient reason for leaving her home, and so dismissed the case.—Port Hope Guide.

Charged With Selling Liquor On Sunday Night, November 21st

The proprietor of the Oriental Hotel was arraigned before Magistrate Dumble at the police court this morning on a charge of having, between 7 o'clock on Saturday, November 20, and six o'clock Monday morning, November 22, sold liquor contrary to the Liquor License Act. An adjournment was asked on the grounds that the time mentioned in the information was so indefinite that the defence had been unable to secure their witnesses, and that Mr. Haverson, K.C., of Toronto, was unable to be present. His Worship refused to grant an adjournment, and the case was proceeded with, Mr. G. N. Gordon appearing for the defendant.

Inspector Stewart was the first witness called. He testified to the accused being a license holder. In answer to Mr. Gordon, he stated that he was in the hotel on the Saturday night and also on Sunday night, and saw nothing illegal. He had had no complaints about this place, except that P. C. Newhall had told him that he (Stewart) could get the accused if he so desired.

P. C. Newhall swore that he was on duty from Saturday night, November 20th, until Sunday morning, and on Sunday night. On Sunday night at 11.55 he saw the proprietor and a man who appeared to have an artificial leg, and another fellow, talking in the rotunda. He saw the defendant enter the bar door in the passageway. Witness was at the bar window. He saw the accused take two glasses of beer from the taps, give it to the two fellows, and then go to the cash register. A few minutes later, another man came along, spoke to the defendant, who immediately went into the bar and prepared him a drink. The midnight 'bus brought several travellers, who, after registering, went into the passage way. The accused went into the bar, and again prepared drinks, taking from the beer taps and other bottles.

A tray, on which were two glasses of beer and two other glasses, was taken by the bell boy, who did not go up the front staircase, but was seen coming down it. There was no light in the bar, but matches were lighted four times. He saw a man eating and drinking in an upstairs room.

To Mr. Gordon, P. C. Newhall stated that he had seen evidences of illegal selling every time that he watched the place, except one.
